William "the Younger" Peverel (c. 1080-1155) was the son of William Peverel. He lived in Nottingham, England. He married Avicia de Lancaster (1088 – c. 1150) in La Marche, Normandy, France. She was the daughter of William de Lancaster I and Countess Gundred de Warenne, daughter of William de Warenne, 2nd Earl of Surrey. In 1114, she bore a daughter, Margaret Peverel. Another member of his family, Maude Peverel (a sister or daughter) was - by 1120 - the first wife of Robert fitz Martin. William inherited the Honour of Peverel. He was a principal supporter of King Stephen, and a commander in the Battle of the Standard. He was captured at The Battle of Lincoln. King Henry II dispossessed William of the Honour in 1153, for conspiring to poison the Earl of Chester - though historians speculate that the King wished to punish him for his 'wickedness and treason' in supporting King Stephen. The Earl died before he took possession of the Honour, and it stayed in the Crown for about a half century.

3156. AVICIA DE LANCASTER (Howard Charles's twenty-eight-times-great-grandmother[3150], see Maternal Ancestry(109), Maternal Ancestry(110), Maternal Ancestry(116) and Maternal Ancestry(119)) was born in 1084, in Nottingham, Nottinghamshire, England, to Rogerus Magnus de Lancaster[3209] and Aumodis de la Marche[3210]. Amédée II (c. 1050 – 26 January 1080) was the Count of Savoy from 1078 to 1080. His life is obscure and few documents mention him. During his reign he was overshadowed by his mother, but he had good relations with the Papacy and, for a time, the Holy Roman Emperor. According to the much later Chronicles of Savoy, Amadeus married Joan, daughter of "Girard, Count of Burgundy", who scholars have surmised to have been Count Gerold of Geneva. The Chronicon Altacumbei says only that "the wife of Amadeus was from Burgundy", which might refer to Amadeus I. If his wife were Genevan, it would explain how the house of Savoy came to possess so early a large portion of the Genevois. His wife, whatever her name and origins, bore Amédée several children, although there is some uncertainty about how many.

Amédee II de Savoie[3165] married Joan de Geneve. They had one son:

Humbert II de Savoie[3107] born in 1065 in Savoy, France; died in 1103 in Savoy, France

3166. JOAN DE GENEVE (Howard Charles's twenty-eight-times-great-grandmother[3160], see Maternal Ancestry(139), Maternal Ancestry(185) and Maternal Ancestry(191)) was born in 1034, in Geneva, Switzerland. Joan was a Countess of Savoy. She died in 1095, aged about 61, in Savoy, France.

William I (1020 – 12 November 1087), called the Great (le Grand or Tête Hardie, "the Stubborn"), was Count of Burgundy from 1057 to 1087 and Mâcon from 1078 to 1087. He was a son of Renaud I and Alice of Normandy, daughter of Richard II, Duke of Normandy. William was the father of several notable children, including Pope Callixtus II.

In 1057, he succeeded his father and reigned over a territory larger than that of the Franche-Comté itself. In 1087, he died in Besançon, Prince-Archbishopric of Besançon, Holy Roman Empire -- an independent city within the County of Burgundy. He was buried in Besançon's Cathedral of St John.

William married a woman named Stephanie (fr) (a.k.a. Etiennette).

Bohemond II (1107/1108 – February 1130) was Prince of Taranto from 1111 to 1128 and Prince of Antioch from 1111/1119 to 1130. He was the son of Bohemond I, who in 1108 was forced to submit to the authority of the Byzantine Empire in the Treaty of Devol. Three years later, the infant Bohemond inherited the Principality of Taranto under the guardianship of his mother, Constance of France. The Principality of Antioch was administered by his father's cousin, Tancred, until 1111. Tancred's nephew, Roger of Salerno, managed the principality from 1111 to 1119. After Roger died in the Battle of the Field of Blood, Baldwin II of Jerusalem took over the administration of Antioch. However, he did acknowledge Bohemond's right to personally rule the principality upon reaching the age of majority.

Bohemond came to Antioch in autumn 1126. He launched successful military campaigns against the nearby Moslem rulers, but his conflict with Joscelin I of Courtenay enabled Imad ad-Din Zengi to secure Mosul and Aleppo. Meanwhile, Roger II of Sicily occupied the Principality of Taranto in 1128. Bohemond died fighting against Danismend Emir Gazi Gümüşhtigin during a military campaign against Cilician Armenia, and Gümüşhtigin sent Bohemond's embalmed head to the Abbasid Caliph.

3172. ALIX RETHEL D ’ANTIOCH (Howard Charles's twenty-eight-times-great-grandmother[3167], see Maternal Ancestry(141), Maternal Ancestry(165) and Maternal Ancestry(174)) was born in 1110, in Jerusalem, Palestine, to Baudouin II de Bourcq de Jerusalem[3233] and Morfia of Melitene[3234]. Alix was a Princess of Antioch. She died in 1131, aged about 21, in Laodicée, Syria.

Alice of Jerusalem (also Haalis, Halis, or Adelicia) was a Princess of Jerusalem. She later became Princess of Antioch.

Alice was the second daughter of King Baldwin II of Jerusalem and Morphia of Melitene. She had three sisters. She was an aunt of Kings Baldwin III and Amalric I.

Baldwin II had become regent of Antioch after the defeat of the principality at the Battle of Ager Sanguinis in 1119. In 1126, the 18-year-old Bohemond, son of Bohemond I, the first prince of Antioch, arrived to claim his inheritance. Immediately after the principality was handed over to him, Bohemond was married to Alice; the marriage was likely part of the negotiations prior to Bohemond's arrival.

In 1130 Bohemond was killed in battle with the Danismends, and Baldwin returned to Antioch to assume the regency, but Alice wanted the city for herself. She attempted to make an alliance with Zengi, the Seljuk atabeg of Mosul and Aleppo, offering to marry her daughter to a Muslim prince. The messenger sent by Alice to Zengi was captured on the way by Baldwin, and was tortured and executed. Alice refused to let Baldwin enter Antioch, but some of the Antiochene nobles opened the gates for Baldwin's representatives, Fulk, Count of Anjou (Alice's brother-in-law) and Joscelin I of Edessa. Alice at first fled to the citadel but finally flung herself on her father's mercy and they were reconciled. She was expelled from Antioch, but was allowed to keep for herself Latakia and Jabala, the cities which had been her dowry when she had married Bohemond. Baldwin left Antioch under the regency of Joscelin, ruling for Alice and Bohemond's young daughter Constance.

Baldwin also died in 1131. Baldwin was succeeded in Jerusalem by his eldest daughter, Alice's sister Melisende and her husband Fulk. Joscelin, too, died soon afterwards, and Alice again attempted to take control of Antioch, not wishing her young daughter to inherit the principality. The Antiochene nobles appealed to Fulk for help, and Alice allied with the rulers of the other two northern Crusader states, Pons of Tripoli and Joscelin I's son Joscelin II. Pons would not allow Fulk to pass through the County of Tripoli, and Fulk was forced to travel to Antioch by sea. Both Pons and Joscelin probably feared that Fulk wanted to impose the suzerainty of Jerusalem over the northern states, although it was also rumoured that Alice had simply bribed them. Fulk and Pons fought a battle near Rugia, but peace was eventually made, and Fulk restored the regency in Antioch, placing the principality under the control of Reynald Masoier. Around 1135, Alice again attempted to take control of Antioch, negotiating with the Byzantine Empire for a husband for Constance; the future emperor Manuel Comnenus was a candidate. Some of the nobles of the principality, however, not wanting a Greek alliance, secretly summoned Raymond of Poitiers to marry Constance. The Patriarch, Ralph of Domfront, convinced Alice that Raymond was coming to marry her, but instead he himself performed the wedding of Raymond and the still-underage Constance. Alice was humiliated and left Antioch, never to return. She died in Latakia after 1136. Of her other sisters, Hodierna married Raymond II of Tripoli, and Ioveta became abbess of the convent in Bethany. Alice's daughter Constance, after the death of Raymond of Poitiers, later married Raynald of Chatillon.

Bohémond II de Hauteville[3171] married Alix Rethel d’Antioch. They had one daughter:

Agnes was the daughter of Guy de Baudemont. She married Robert I of Dreux, he was the fifth son of Louis VI of France and Adélaide de Maurienne. Through his mother he was related to the Carolingians and to the Marquess William V of Montferrat. Their children were Robert II (1154–1218), count of Dreux and Braine.

Henry (1155–1199), bishop of Orléans
Alix (1156 – aft. 1217), married Raoul I, lord of Coucy
Philippe (1158–1217), bishop of Beauvais.
Isabella (1160–1239), married Hugh III of Broyes
Peter (1161–1186)
William (1163 – aft. 1189), lord of Braye, Torcy, and Chilly
John (1164 – aft. 1189)
Mamilie (1166–1200)
Margaret (1167–?), nun.

Robert de Dreux[3185] married Agnes de Baudemont. They had one son:

Robert II de Dreux[3136] born in 1154; died in 1218

3187. PHILIPPE I CAPET (Howard Charles's twenty-eight-times-great-grandfather[3183], see Maternal Ancestry(165) and Maternal Ancestry(184)) was born on 23 May 1052, in Champagne-et-Fontaine, Aquitaine, France, to Henry I Capet[3245] and Anne of Kiev[3246]. Philippe I was a King of France. He died on 29 July 1108, aged 56, in Castle of Melun. He was buried in Monastery of Saint-Benoît-sur-Loire.

Philip was born 23 May 1052 at Champagne-et-Fontaine, the son of Henry I and his wife Anne of Kiev. Unusual at the time for Western Europe, his name was of Greek origin, being bestowed upon him by his mother. Although he was crowned king at the age of seven, until age fourteen (1066) his mother acted as regent, the first queen of France ever to do so. Baldwin V of Flanders also acted as co-regent.

Following the death of Baldwin VI of Flanders, Robert the Frisian seized Flanders. Baldwin's wife, Richilda requested aid from Philip, who defeated Robert at the battle of Cassel in 1071. Philip first married Bertha in 1072. Although the marriage produced the necessary heir, Philip fell in love with Bertrade de Montfort, the wife of Fulk IV, Count of Anjou. He repudiated Bertha (claiming she was too fat) and married Bertrade on 15 May 1092. In 1094, he was excommunicated by Hugh of Die, for the first time; after a long silence, Pope Urban II repeated the excommunication at the Council of Clermont in November 1095. Several times the ban was lifted as Philip promised to part with Bertrade, but he always returned to her, but in 1104 Philip made a public penance and must have kept his involvement with Bertrade discreet. In France, the king was opposed by Bishop Ivo of Chartres, a famous jurist.

Philip appointed Alberic first Constable of France in 1060. A great part of his reign, like his father's, was spent putting down revolts by his power-hungry vassals. In 1077, he made peace with William the Conqueror, who gave up attempting the conquest of Brittany. In 1082, Philip I expanded his demesne with the annexation of the Vexin. Then in 1100, he took control of Bourges.

It was at the aforementioned Council of Clermont that the First Crusade was launched. Philip at first did not personally support it because of his conflict with Urban II. Philip's brother Hugh of Vermandois, however, was a major participant.

Philip died in the castle of Melun and was buried per request at the monastery of Saint-Benoit-sur-Loire – and not in St Denis among his forefathers. He was succeeded by his son, Louis VI, whose succession was, however, not uncontested. According to Abbot Suger:

"... King Philip daily grew feebler. For after he had abducted the Countess of Anjou, he could achieve nothing worthy of the royal dignity; consumed by desire for the lady he had seized, he gave himself up entirely to the satisfaction of his passion. So he lost interest in the affairs of state and, relaxing too much, took no care for his body, well-made and handsome though it was. The only thing that maintained the strength of the state was the fear and love felt for his son and successor. When he was almost sixty, he ceased to be king, breathing his last breath at the castle of Melun-sur-Seine, in the presence of the [future king] Louis... They carried the body in a great procession to the noble monastery of St-Benoit-sur-Loire, where King Philip wished to be buried; there are those who say they heard from his own mouth that he deliberately chose not to be buried among his royal ancestors in the church of St. Denis because he had not treated that church as well as they had, and because among so many noble kings his own tomb would not have counted for much.

3188. BERTHA OF HOLLAND (Howard Charles's twenty-eight-times-great-grandmother[3184], see Maternal Ancestry(165) and Maternal Ancestry(184)) was born in 1055, in Vlaardingen, Zuid-Holland, Netherlands, to Floris of Holland[3247] and Gertrude van Sachsen N- Billung[3248]. Bertha was a Queen of France. She died on 15 October 1094, aged about 39, in Montreuil, Nord-Pas-de-Calais, France.

Bertha of Holland (c. 1055 – 15 October 1094), also known as Berthe or Bertha of Frisia and erroneously as Berta or Bertrada, was queen consort of the Franks from 1072 until 1092, as the first wife of King Philip I. Bertha's marriage to the king in 1072 was a result of peace negotiations between him and her stepfather, Count Robert the Frisian of Flanders. After nine years of childlessness, the royal couple had three children, including Philip's successor, Louis the Fat. Philip, however, grew tired of his wife by 1090, and repudiated her in 1092 in order to marry the already married Bertrada of Montfort. That marriage was a scandal since both Philip and Bertrada were already married to other people, at least until Queen Bertha died the next year.

Philippe I Capet[3187] married Bertha of Holland. They had two children:

Constance Capet[3232] born in 1078 in Paris, France; died in 1125

Louis VI Capet[3138] born on 1 December 1081; died on 1 August 1137 in Paris, France

3193. KING FULK V D'ANJOU (Howard Charles's twenty-eight-times-great-grandfather[3189], see Maternal Ancestry(147) and Maternal Ancestry(188)) was born in 1092, in Anjou, Isere, Rhone-Alpes, France, to Fulk IV D'Anjou[3255] and Bertrade de Montfort[3256]. Fulk V became known as ‘The Younger’. The Younger was a King of Jerusalem. He died on 13 November 1143, aged about 51, in Acre, Israel. He was buried in Church of the Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem.

ulk (Latin: Fulco, French: Foulque or Foulques; c. 1089/92 – 13 November 1143), also known as Fulk the Younger, was the Count of Anjou (as Fulk V) from 1109 to 1129 and the King of Jerusalem from 1131 to his death. During his reign, the kingdom of Jerusalem reached its largest territorial extent.

Fulk was born at Angers, between 1089 and 1092, the son of Count Fulk IV of Anjou and Bertrade de Montfort. In 1092, Bertrade deserted her husband and bigamously married King Philip I of France.

He became count of Anjou upon his father's death in 1109. In the next year, he married Ermengarde of Maine, cementing Angevin control over the County of Maine. He was originally an opponent of King Henry I of England and a supporter of King Louis VI of France, but in 1118 or 1119 he had allied with Henry when he arranged for his daughter Matilda to marry Henry's son and heir, William Adelin. Fulk went on crusade in 1119 or 1120, and became attached to the Knights Templar (Orderic Vitalis). He returned, late in 1121, after which he began to subsidize the Templars, maintaining two knights in the Holy Land for a year. Much later, Henry arranged for his daughter Matilda to marry Fulk's son Geoffrey of Anjou, which she did in 1127 or 1128.

Fulk and Melisende became joint rulers of Jerusalem in 1131 with Baldwin II's death. From the start Fulk assumed sole control of the government, excluding Melisende altogether. He favored fellow countrymen from Anjou to the native nobility. The other crusader states to the north feared that Fulk would attempt to impose the suzerainty of Jerusalem over them, as Baldwin II had done; but as Fulk was far less powerful than his deceased father-in-law, the northern states rejected his authority. Melisende's sister Alice of Antioch, exiled from the Principality by Baldwin II, took control of Antioch once more after the death of her father. She allied with Pons of Tripoli and Joscelin II of Edessa to prevent Fulk from marching north in 1132; Fulk and Pons fought a brief battle before peace was made and Alice was exiled again.

In Jerusalem as well, Fulk was resented by the second generation of Jerusalem Christians who had grown up there since the First Crusade. These "natives" focused on Melisende's cousin, the popular Hugh II of Le Puisset, count of Jaffa, who was devotedly loyal to the Queen. Fulk saw Hugh as a rival, and it did not help matters when Hugh's own stepson accused him of disloyalty. In 1134, in order to expose Hugh, Fulk accused him of infidelity with Melisende. Hugh rebelled in protest. Hugh secured himself to Jaffa, and allied himself with the Muslims of Ascalon. He was able to defeat the army set against him by Fulk, but this situation could not hold. The Patriarch interceded in the conflict, perhaps at the behest of Melisende. Fulk agreed to peace and Hugh was exiled from the kingdom for three years, a lenient sentence.

In 1143, while the king and queen were on holiday in Acre, Fulk was killed in a hunting accident. His horse stumbled, fell, and Fulk's skull was crushed by the saddle, "and his brains gushed forth from both ears and nostrils", as William of Tyre describes. He was carried back to Acre, where he lay unconscious for three days before he died. He was buried in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem. Though their marriage started in conflict, Melisende mourned for him privately as well as publicly. Fulk was survived by his son Geoffrey of Anjou by his first wife, and Baldwin III and Amalric I by Melisende.

3194. ERMGARDE DE BEAUGENCY (Howard Charles's twenty-eight-times-great-grandmother[3190], see Maternal Ancestry(147) and Maternal Ancestry(188)) was born on 1 July 1096, in LeMans, Sarthe, Maine, France, to Elias I de Maine[3257] and Mathilda de Château-Du-Loire[3258]. Ermgarde was a Countess of Maine and the Lady of Château-du-Loir. She died on 15 January 1126, aged 29, in Maine, Charente, Poitou-Charentes, France.

Fulk V D'Anjou[3193], aged about 18, married Ermgarde de Beaugency, aged 14, on 11 July 1110 in Jerusalem, Israel. They had one son:

Geoffrey Plantagenet[3144] born on 24 August 1113 in Isère, Rhône-Alpes, France; died on 7 September 1151 in Chateau, Eure-Et-Loire, France

3195. HENRY I BEAUCLERC (Howard Charles's twenty-eight-times-great-grandfather[3191], see Maternal Ancestry(147) and Maternal Ancestry(189)) was born in 1068, in Selby, Yorkshire, England, to William (The Conqueror) of Normandy[3259] and Matilda of Flanders[3260]. Henry I was a King of England. He died (Surfeit of lampreys) on 1 December 1135, aged about 67, in Lyons-la-Forêt, France. He was buried in Reading Abbey, England.

Henry I (c. 1068 – 1 December 1135), also known as Henry Beauclerc, was King of England from 1100 to his death. Henry was the fourth son of William the Conqueror and was educated in Latin and the liberal arts. On William's death in 1087, Henry's elder brothers Robert Curthose and William Rufus inherited Normandy and England, respectively, but Henry was left landless. Henry purchased the County of Cotentin in western Normandy from Robert, but William and Robert deposed him in 1091. Henry gradually rebuilt his power base in the Cotentin and allied himself with William against Robert. Henry was present when William died in a hunting accident in 1100, and he seized the English throne, promising at his coronation to correct many of William's less popular policies. Henry married Matilda of Scotland but continued to have a large number of mistresses, by whom he had many illegitimate children.

Robert, who invaded in 1101, disputed Henry's control of England; this military campaign ended in a negotiated settlement that confirmed Henry as king. The peace was short-lived, and Henry invaded the Duchy of Normandy in 1105 and 1106, finally defeating Robert at the Battle of Tinchebray. Henry kept Robert imprisoned for the rest of his life. Henry's control of Normandy was challenged by Louis VI of France. Baldwin of Flanders and Fulk of Anjou, who promoted the rival claims of Robert's son, William Clito, and supported a major rebellion in the Duchy between 1116 and 1119. Following Henry's victory at the Battle of Brémaud, a favourable peace settlement was agreed with Louis in 1120.

Considered by contemporaries to be a harsh but effective ruler, Henry skillfully manipulated the barons in England and Normandy. In England, he drew on the existing Anglo-Saxon system of justice, local government and taxation, but also strengthened it with additional institutions, including the royal exchequer and itinerant justices. Normandy was also governed through a growing system of justices and an exchequer. Many of the officials who ran Henry's system were "new men" of obscure backgrounds rather than from families of high status, who rose through the ranks as administrators. Henry encouraged ecclesiastical reform, but became embroiled in a serious dispute in 1101 with Archbishop Anselm of Canterbury, which was resolved through a compromise solution in 1105. He supported the Cluniac order and played a major role in the selection of the senior clergy in England and Normandy. Henry’s only legitimate son and heir, William Adelin, drowned in the White Ship disaster of 1120, throwing the royal succession into doubt. Henry took a second wife, Adeliza, in the hope of having another son, but their marriage was childless. In response to this, Henry declared his daughter, Matilda, his heir and married her to Geoffrey of Anjou. The relationship between Henry and the couple became strained, and fighting broke out along the border with Anjou. Henry died on 1 December 1135 after a week of illness. Despite his plans for Matilda, the King was succeeded by his nephew, Stephen of Blois, resulting in a period of civil war known as the Anarchy.

3196. MATILDA OF SCOTLAND (Howard Charles's twenty-eight-times-great-grandmother[3192], see Maternal Ancestry(147) and Maternal Ancestry(189)) was born in 1080, in Dumfernline, Scotland, to Malcolm III of Scotland[3261] and Margaret of Wessex[3262]. Matilda was a Queen of England. She died on 1 May 1118, aged about 37, in Westminster Palace. London, England. She was buried in Westminster Abbey, London, England. Citation: Source 96. Unreliable or estimated.

Matilda of Scotland (c. 1080 – 1 May 1118), originally christened Edith, was Queen of England as the first wife of King Henry I. Matilda was the daughter of the English princess Saint Margaret and the Scottish king Malcolm III. At the age of about six Matilda was sent with her sister to be educated in a convent in southern England, where her aunt Cristina was abbess. It is not clear if she spent much time in Scotland thereafter. In 1093, when she was about 13, she was engaged to an English nobleman when her father and brother Edward were killed in a minor raid into England, and her mother died soon after; her fiance then abandoned the proposed marriage. In Scotland a messy succession conflict followed between Matilda's uncle Donald III, her half-brother Duncan II and brother Edgar until 1097. Matilda's whereabouts during this no doubt difficult period are uncertain.

But after the suspicious death of William II of England in 1100 and accession of his brother Henry I, Matilda's prospects improved. Henry moved quickly to propose to her. It is said that he already knew and admired her, and she may indeed have spent time at the English court. Edgar was now secure on the Scottish throne, offering the prospect of better relations between the two countries, and Matilda also had the considerable advantage of Anglo-Saxon royal blood, which the Norman dynasty largely lacked.[2] There was a difficulty about the marriage; a special church council was called to be satisfied that Matilda had not taken vows as a nun, which her emphatic testimony managed to convince them of.

Matilda and Henry married in late 1100. They had two children who reached adulthood and two more who died young. Matilda led a literary and musical court, but was also pious. She embarked on building projects for the church, and took a role in government when her husband was away; many surviving charters are signed by her. Matilda lived to see her daughter Matilda become Holy Roman Empress but died two years before the drowning of her son William. Henry remarried, but had no further legitimate children, which caused a succession crisis known as The Anarchy. Matilda is buried in Westminster Abbey and was fondly remembered by her subjects as "Matilda the Good Queen" and "Matilda of Blessed Memory". There was an attempt to have her canonized, which was not pursued.

Henry I Beaucler[3195] married Matilda of Scotland. They had one daughter:

Matilda Beaulere[3145], born on 7 February 1102 in Caen, Normandie, France; died on 10 September 1167 in Abbey of Notre Dame, Rouen, France

3197. WILLIAM IX (THE TROUBADOR" DE ACQUITAINE (Howard Charles's twenty-eight-times-great-grandfather[3193], see Maternal Ancestry(147) and Maternal Ancestry(190)) was born in 1071 to William VIII de Acquitaine[3263] and Hildegard de Bourgogne[3264]. He died in 1126, aged about 55. Citation: Source 96. Unreliable or estimated.

William IX (22 October 1071 – 10 February 1127), called the Troubador, was the Duke of Aquitaine and Gascony and Count of Poitou (as William VII) between 1086 and his death. He was also one of the leaders of the Crusade of 1101. Though his political and military achievements have a certain historical importance, he is best known as the earliest troubadour — a vernacular lyric poet in the Occitan language — whose work survived. His birth was a cause of great celebration at the Aquitanian court, but the Church at first considered him illegitimate because of his father's earlier divorces and his parents' consanguinity. This obliged his father to make a pilgrimage to Rome soon after his birth to seek Papal approval of his third marriage and the young William's legitimacy.

3198. PHILIPPA MAUDE DE ACQUITAINE (Howard Charles's twenty-eight-times-great-grandmother[3194], see Maternal Ancestry(147) and Maternal Ancestry(190)) was born in 1073. She died in 1118, aged about 45.

Philippa was born in approximately 1073 to Count William IV of Toulouse, and his wife Emma of Mortain. She was his only surviving child, and thus, by the laws of Toulouse, his heir. In 1088, William went on a pilgrimage to Palestine, leaving his brother Raymond of Saint-Gilles as regent. (Before he left, it is claimed, he also married his daughter to the King of Aragon in order to disinherit her; however, this marriage is apocryphal, as contemporary evidence shows that Sancho was still married to his previous wife at the time of his death in 1094.)

In 1116, a humiliated Philippa, devastated by her husband's repayment of her service to him for so many years, left the Court, taking refuge at the Abbey of Fontevrault. There she became a close friend of her husband's first wife, Ermengarde of Anjou, and the two spent much time reflecting upon the shortcomings of William. However, for all Philippa's devotion to the Abbey and its ideals, she found little peace there, both angry and resentful that her husband had cast her off in favour of a mistress. She died of unknown causes there on 28 November 1118, survived by her husband, his mistress, and Ermengarde, who would shortly attempt to avenge Philippa by attempting to have Dangereuse banished from Aquitaine.

"According to most sources, Whittington Castle was built by Roger de Montgomery. The first member of the Peverel family to be associated with it is generally believed to be William Peverel, son of Ranulf Peverel, during the reign of Henry I. If this is so, why does Fulk le Fitz Warine mention a Payn Peverel? The answer is, "I don't know!" The only explanation is in Fulk le Fitz Warine which says that after Payn's death, William Peverel, his sister's son took over Payn's inheritance.

At some point, a knight by the name of Guarin de Metz married into the Peverel family. The date is difficult to estimate, and even the events leading up to the marriage are difficult to verify. However, the story is worthy of repeat.

Peverel, William Perhaps illegitimate son of William I by his mistress; took name of Peverel from stepfather who married her. Large holdings in Notts. and Derby. Also in 6 other counties." From Domesday Book at http://www.domesdaybook.co.uk/landownersp-r.html.

Otto (French: Odon, Oddon, Othon); Italian: Oddone; c. 1023 – c. 1057/1060) was count of Savoy from around 1051 until his death. Through marriage to Adelaide, the heiress of Ulric Manfred II, he also administered the march of Susa from around 1046 until his death.

Through his marriage to Adelaide, Otto obtained extensive possessions in northern Italy. Thereafter, the House of Savoy concentrated their expansion efforts towards Italy instead of north of the Alps as they had done before. Savoy's lands occupied much of modern Savoy and Piedmont, although several other small states could be found between them. In the 1050s, Otto allowed coins to be minted at Aiguebelle. The archbishop of Vienne, Léger, who had sole right of minting in the region, complained to Pope Leo IX, so Otto forbade further coining at Aiguebelle.

3226. ADELAIDE DE SUZA (Howard Charles's twenty-nine-times-great-grandmother[3218], see Maternal Ancestry(139), Maternal Ancestry(185) and Maternal Ancestry(191)) was born in 1014, in Turin Italy. Adelaide was a Duchess of Savoy. She died on 19 December 1091, aged about 77, in Camischio, Ivrea, Savoie.

Adelaide of Susa or Adelaide of Turin (also Adelheid, Adelais, or Adeline; c. 1014/1020 – 19 December 1091)[1] was the Marchioness of Turin from 1034 to her death. She was the last of the Arduinici. Born in Turin to Ulric Manfred II and Bertha around 1014/1020, Adelaide's early life is not well known. Adelaide had two younger sisters, Immilla and Bertha. She may also have had a brother, whose name is not known, who predeceased his father. Thus, on Ulric Manfred's death (in December 1033 or 1034), the great margraviate was divided between his three daughters, though the greatest part by far went to Adelaide. She received the property in the counties of Turin, especially in the Susa Valley, Auriate, and Asti. Adelaide also inherited property, but probably not comital authority, in Albenga, Alba, Bredulo and Ventimiglia. It is likely that Adelaide's mother, Bertha, briefly acted as regent for Adelaide after Ulric Manfred's death.

After the death of her husband Otto, c.1057/60, Adelaide ruled the march of Turin and the county of Savoy alongside her sons, Peter and Amadeus. It is sometimes said that Adelaide abandoned Turin as a capital and began to reside permanently at Susa. This is incorrect. Adelaide is documented far more frequently at the margravial palace in Turin than anywhere else.

In 1070 Adelaide captured and burned the city of Asti, which had rebelled against her. Adelaide died in December 1091. According to a later legend, she was buried in the parochial church of Canischio (Canisculum), a small village on the Cuorgnè in the Valle dell'Oroco, where she had supposedly been living incognito for twenty-two years before her death. The noted medieval historian Charles William Previté-Orton calls this story "absurd". In the cathedral of Susa, in a niche in the wall, there is a statue of walnut wood, beneath a bronze veneer, representing Adelaide, genuflecting in prayer. Above it can be read the inscription: Questa è Adelaide, cui l’istessa Roma Cole, e primo d’Ausonia onor la noma.

Otto I de Savoie[3225], aged about 16, married Adelaide de Suzza, aged about 32, in 1046 in Maurine, Italy. They had one son:

Amédée II de Savoie[3165] born in 1065; died on 14 October 1103

Reginald I, Count of Burgundy was the second Count of the Free County of Burgundy. Born in 986, he was the son of Otto-William, Count of Burgundy (the first Count) and Ermentrude de Roucy.

In 1016, Reginald married Alice of Normandy.[1] He succeeded to the County on his father’s death in 1026. Reginald was succeeded by his son, William I, on his death in 1057.

Reginald married Alice and had the following children:

William I of Burgundy

Gui de Brionne or Guy of Burgundy (c. 1025–1069), educated at the court of Normandy, who would lead a revolt for control of the Duchy of Normandy against his cousin William (William the Conqueror). He had to leave his county of Brionne and Vernon in Normandy, after being at the head of the coalition of the barons of Normandy, which was defeated at the battle of Val-ès-Dunes in 1047.[2] Guy found refuge with his uncle Geoffrey II of Anjou. He later attempted to take over the county of Burgundy from his brother William.

Hugh (c. 1037 – c. 1086), Viscount of Lons-le-Saunier, sire Montmorot, Navilly and Scey married to Aldeberge Scey. They had a son Montmorot Thibert, founder of the house Montmorot (or Montmoret).

Falcon or Fouques of Burgundy (in fate unknown).

Bohemond I (c. 1054 – 3 March 1111) was the Prince of Taranto from 1089 to 1111 and the Prince of Antioch from 1098 to 1111. He was a leader of the First Crusade, which was governed by a committee of nobles. The Norman monarchy he founded in Antioch arguably outlasted those of England and of Sicily.

In 1097, Bohemond and his uncle Roger I of Sicily were attacking Amalfi, which had revolted against Duke Roger, when bands of crusaders began to pass on their way through Italy to Constantinople. The zeal of the crusader came upon Bohemond; it is possible, however, that he saw in the First Crusade nothing more than a chance to carve for himself an eastern principality. Geoffrey Malaterra bluntly states that Bohemond took the Cross with the intention of plundering and conquering Greek lands.

He gathered a Norman army, perhaps one of the finest in the crusading host,[according to whom?] at the head of which he crossed the Adriatic Sea and penetrated to Constantinople along the route he had tried to follow in 1082–1084. He was careful to observe a "correct" attitude towards Alexius and, when he arrived at Constantinople in April 1097, did homage to the Emperor. He may have negotiated with Alexius about a principality at Antioch; if he did so, he had little encouragement. From Constantinople to Antioch, Bohemond was the real leader of the First Crusade. It says much for his leadership that the First Crusade succeeded in crossing Asia Minor, in which the Crusades of 1101, 1147 and the 1189 all failed.

Bohemond and Constance produced a son, Bohemond II of Antioch.

Mausoleum of Bohemond in Canosa di Puglia.

Encouraged by his success, Bohemond resolved to use his army of 34,000 men not to defend Antioch against the Greeks, but to attack Alexius.[39] Alexius, aided by the Venetians, proved too strong and Bohemond had to submit to a humiliating peace. Under the Treaty of Devol in 1108, he became the vassal of Alexius with the title of sebastos, consented to receive Alexius' pay, and promised to cede disputed territories and to admit a Greek patriarch into Antioch. Henceforth, Bohemond was a broken man. He died six months later without returning to the East,[40] and was buried at Canosa in Apulia, in 1111.[37].

3232. CONSTANCE CAPET (Howard Charles's twenty-nine-times-great-grandmother[3224], see Maternal Ancestry(141), Maternal Ancestry(165) and Maternal Ancestry(174)) was born in 1078, in Paris, France, to Philippe I Capet[3187] and Bertha of Holland[3188]. She died in 1125, aged about 47.

Bohémond Guiscard I de Hauteville[3231], aged about 54, married Constance Capet, aged about 28, in 1106 in Chartres, Eure-Et-Loire, France. They had one son:

Bohémond II de Hauteville[3171] born in 1107 in Canossa-di-Puglia, Puglia, Italy; died on 5 February 1130 in River Jihan, Cilicia.

3233. BAUDOUIN II DE BOURCQ DE JERUSALEM (Howard Charles's twenty-nine-times-great-grandfather[3225], see Maternal Ancestry(141), Maternal Ancestry(165) and Maternal Ancestry(174)) was born in 1060, in France. Baudouin II was a King of Jerusalem. He died on 21 August 1131, aged about 71, in Jerusalem, Palestine.

Baldwin II (French: Baudouin, also called Baldwin of Bourcq or Bourg; died 21 August 1131) was the second count of Edessa from 1100 to 1118, and the third ruler of Jerusalem from 1118 until his death.

Baldwin was the son of Hugh I, Count of Rethel, and his wife Melisende, daughter of Guy I of Montlhéry. [1] He had two older brothers, Gervaise and Manasses, and two sisters Matilda and Hodierna. Baldwin was called a cousin of the brothers Eustace III of Boulogne, Godfrey of Bouillon, and Baldwin of Boulogne, but the exact manner in which they are related has never been discovered. Some books (in particular Steven Runciman's History of the Crusades) have claimed a fictitious Ida of Boulogne as grandmother to Baldwin II in order to force the relationship. While Ida of Boulogne did exist, neither of Baldwin's parents were her descendants. He left his own family behind to follow his cousins on the First Crusade in 1096. Upon the death of Baldwin I in 1118, the crown was offered to the king's elder brother Eustace III, but Joscelin of Courtenay insisted that the crown pass to Baldwin of Bourcq, despite Count
Baldwin having exiled Joscelin from Edessa in 1113. Baldwin of Edessa accepted and was crowned king of Jerusalem as Baldwin II on Easter Sunday, 14 April 1118. Almost immediately, the kingdom was simultaneously invaded by the Seljuks from Syria and the Fatimids from Egypt, although by showing himself ready and willing to defend his territory, Baldwin forced the Muslim army to back down without a battle. In 1119, the crusader Principality of Antioch was invaded, and Baldwin hurried north with the army of Jerusalem. Roger of Salerno, prince of Antioch, would not wait for Baldwin's reinforcements, and the Antiochenese army was destroyed in a battle the crusaders came to call Ager Sanguinis (the Field of Blood). Although it was a crushing blow, Baldwin helped Antioch recover and drove out the Seljuks later that year.

3234. MORFIA OF MELITENE (Howard Charles's twenty-nine-times-great-grandmother[3226], see Maternal Ancestry(141), Maternal Ancestry(165) and Maternal Ancestry(174)). Morfia was a Queen of Jerusalem. She died in 1126.

Morfia of Melitene, or Morfia, or Moraphia (died c. 1126 or 1127) was the wife of Baldwin II, king of the crusader Kingdom of Jerusalem.
Morfia was the daughter of an Armenian nobleman named Gabriel (or Khoril, in Armenian), the ruler of the city of Melitene. Although ethnically Armenian, the family practised the Greek Orthodox faith. Melitene was a neighbour of the crusader County of Edessa, and Gabriel soon became a vassal of the county. The future Baldwin II of Jerusalem was also count of Edessa after 1100, and he consolidated his position in the county by marrying Morphia around 1101. Gabriel, who was very wealthy, gave 50,000 gold bezants as a dowry.
Baldwin was a crusader knight who carved out the Crusader State of Edessa and married Morphia, daughter of the Armenian Prince Gabriel of Melitene, in a diplomatic marriage to fortify alliances in the region.

Baudouin II de Bourcq de Jerusalem[3233] married Morfia of Melitene. They had one daughter:

Oleg was a younger son of Sviatoslav Iaroslavich, Prince of Chernigov and his first wife, Killikiya. He might have been either the second or the fourth among the four sons of Sviatoslav Iaroslavich by Killikiya, because their order of seniority is uncertain. According to historian Martin Dimnik, Oleg was born around 1050. Oleg was named after his grand uncle.[citation needed] His baptismal name was Michael. Dimnik writes that "it is highly probable" that Oleg succeeded his brother, Gleb in Tmutarakan after their father appointed the latter Prince of Novgorod in about 1068. Oleg's father and uncle, Vsevolod Iaroslavich made an alliance against their elder brother, Izaiaev Iaroslavich, Grand Prince of Kiev and dethroned him on 22 March 1073. According to Dimnik, Oleg received the Principality of Vladimir from his father who succeeded Izaiaev Iaroslavich in Kiev. In short, Oleg and his cousin, Vladimir Monomach—son of Vsevolod Iaroslavich—became close friends. Monomach writes in his Instruction that Oleg was the godfather of his eldest son, Mstislaw. The two cousins together commanded the troops Oleg's father sent to assist Boleslav II of Poland in Bohemia in 1076, according to the Russian Primary Chronicle.

3240. THEOPHANO MIKAHL MOUZALONISSA (Howard Charles's twenty-nine-times-great-grandmother[3232], see Maternal Ancestry(173)) was born in 1058. She is no longer living.

Oleg Mikahil of Kiev[3239] married Theophano Mikahil Mouzalonissa. They had one son:

Vsevolod II Yurij of Kiev[3179] born in 1079 in Chernigov, Ukraine; died on 1 August 1146

3241. CONSTANTINE ANGELOS (Howard Charles's twenty-nine-times-great-grandfather[3233], see Maternal Ancestry(168) and Maternal Ancestry(175)) was born in 1100, in Constantinople, Turkey, to Manolis Angelos[3305] and Theodora Komnene[3306]. Constantine was a Byzantine aristocrat. He died in 1166, aged about 66, in Constantinople, Turkey.

Constantine Angelos ( c. 1093 – after 1166) was a Byzantine aristocrat who married into the Komnenian dynasty and served as a military commander under Manuel I Komnenos, serving in the western and northern Balkans and as an admiral against the Normans. He was the founder of the Angelos dynasty, which went on to rule the Byzantine Empire in 1185–1204 and found and rule the Despotate of Epirus (1205–1318) and the Empire of Thessalonica (1224–1242/46).

3242. THEODORA KOMNENE (Howard Charles's twenty-nine-times-great-grandmother[3234], see Maternal Ancestry(168) and Maternal Ancestry(175)) was born on 15 January 1096, in Trabzon, Turkey, to Alexios Komnenos Komnenos[3307] and Irene Doukaina[3308]. She died in 1125, aged about 29, in Constantinople, Turkey.

Theodora Komnene (born 15 January 1096) was a Byzantine noblewoman, being the fourth daughter of Emperor Alexios I Komnenos and Irene Doukaina. She married Constantine Angelos, by whom she had seven children. Byzantine emperors Alexios III Angelos and Isaac II Angelos were her grandsons, thereby making her an ancestor of the Angelos dynasty.

Constantine Angelos[3241] married Theodora Komnene. They had one son:

Andronikos Angelos[3181] born in 1122 in Constantinople, Turkey; died in 1190 in Constantinople, Turkey

3243. WERNER I OF HABSBURG (Howard Charles's twenty-nine-times-great-grandfather[3235], see Maternal Ancestry(175)) was born in 1026, in Habsburg, Aargau, Switzerland, to Radbot of Habsburg[3309] and Ida von Lothringen[3310]. He died on 11 November 1096, aged about 70, in Muri, Aargau, Switzerland.

Werner I, Count of Habsburg (c. 1025/1030 – 11 November 1096), was a nobleman and an early member of the House of Habsburg.
He was sometimes called Werner the Pious. His father was Radbot, Count of Habsburg, and his mother was Ida de Lorraine (also known as Ida von Lothringen), who was the granddaughter of Hugh the Great and the great-granddaughter of Henry the Fowler.
In 1057, he married Eginlinde of Nellenbourg (1027–1090). He had two sons: Otto II, and Albert II (also known as Albrecht II or Adalbert II).
3244. REGULINDE VAN NELLENBURG (Howard Charles's twenty-nine-times-great-grandmother[3236], see Maternal Ancestry(175)) was born in 1027, in Oberbayern, Schwaben, Bayern, Germany. She died on 27 May 1090, aged about 62, in Habsburg, Germany.

Werner I of Habsburg[3243] married Regulinde van Nellenburg. They had one son:

Otto II of Habsburg[3183] born in 1057 in Habsburg, Aargau, Switzerland; died on 8 November 1111 in Budenheim, Rhineland-Palatinate, Germany

3245. HENRY I CAPET (Howard Charles's twenty-nine-times-great-grandfather[3239], see Maternal Ancestry(111) and Maternal Ancestry(184)) was born on 4 May 1008, in Rheims, France, to Robert II (The Pious) Capet[3311] and Constance de Arles[3312]. Henry I was a King of France. He died on 4 August 1060, aged 52, in Vitry-en-Brie, France. He was buried in Basilica of St Denis. St Denis Abbey, St Denis, Seine, France.

A member of the House of Capet, Henry was born in Reims, the son of King Robert II (972–1031) and Constance of Arles (986–1034). He was crowned King of France at the Cathedral in Reims on 14 May 1027, in the Capetian tradition, while his father still lived. He had little influence and power until he became sole ruler on his father's death.

The reign of Henry I, like those of his predecessors, was marked by territorial struggles. Initially, he joined his brother Robert, with the support of their mother, in a revolt against his father (1025). His mother, however, supported Robert as heir to the old king, on whose death Henry was left to deal with his rebel sibling. In 1032, he placated his brother by giving him the duchy of Burgundy which his father had given him in 1016.

In an early strategic move, Henry came to the rescue of his very young nephew-in-law, the newly appointed Duke William of Normandy (who would go on to become William the Conqueror), to suppress a revolt by William's vassals. In 1047, Henry secured the dukedom for William in their decisive victory over the vassals at the Battle of Val-ès-Dunes near Caen; however, Henry would later support the barons against William until the former's death in 1060.

In 1051, William married Matilda, the daughter of the count of Flanders, which Henry saw as a threat to his throne.[6] In 1054, and again in 1057, Henry invaded Normandy, but on both occasions he was defeated.

Henry had three meetings with Henry III, Holy Roman Emperor—all at Ivois. In early 1043, he met him to discuss the marriage of the emperor with Agnes of Poitou, the daughter of Henry's vassal. In October 1048, the two Henries met again and signed a treaty of friendship. The final meeting took place in May 1056 and concerned disputes over Theobald III and County of Blois. The debate over the duchy became so heated that Henry accused the emperor of breach of contract and subsequently left. In 1058, Henry was selling bishoprics and abbacies, ignoring the accusations of simony and tyranny by the Papal legate Cardinal Humbert.[9] Despite his efforts, Henry I's twenty-nine-year reign saw feudal power in France reach its pinnacle.

King Henry I died on 4 August 1060 in Vitry-en-Brie, France, and was interred in Basilica of St Denis. He was succeeded by his son, Philip I of France, who was 7 at the time of his death; for six years Henry's queen Anne of Kiev ruled as regent.

He was also Duke of Burgundy from 1016 to 1032, when he abdicated the duchy to his brother Robert.

3246. ANNE OF KIEV (Howard Charles's twenty-nine-times-great-grandmother[3240], see Maternal Ancestry(111) and Maternal Ancestry(184)) was born in 1024 to Yaroslav I (The Wise) of Kiev[3313] and Ingegerd Olafsdotter[3314]. Anne was a Queen of France. She died in 1075, aged about 51. She was buried in Villiers Abbey, La Ferte-Alais, Essonne.

Anne was born in Kiev between 1024 and 1032. Her parents were Yaroslav the Wise, Grand Prince of Kiev and Novgorod, and Ingegerd Olafsdotter of Sweden, his second wife. There is not much information about her childhood, but she was evidently given a careful education, and could read and write (in the Cyrillic alphabet), which was rare even among royal princesses at the time.

In 1043-44, Anne was suggested to marry the German Roman Emperor, but the plan was never brought to fruition. After the death of his first wife, Matilda of Frisia, King Henry searched the courts of Europe for a suitable bride, but could not locate a princess who was not related in blood by the papal laws against consanguinity. In 1049, the King of France sent an embassy to distant Kiev, which returned with Anne (also called Agnes). Politically, there was not much gain as Kiev was too far away for any territorial gain for France, but the marriage was considered suitable in France because of the rank of Anne, because she was not related to Henry, and because she came from a fertile family and had herself many siblings. But she did bring wealth to the match, including a jacinth which Suger later mounted in the reliquary of St. Denis.

Henry I Capet[3245], aged 43, married Anne of Kiev, aged about 26, on 19 May 1051 in Cathedral of Rheims. They had two sons:

- Philippe I Capet[3187] born on 23 May 1052 in Champagne-et-Fontaine, Aquitaine, France; died on 29 July 1108 in Castle of Melun

- Hughes "Magnus" de Vermandois[3215] born in 1057 in Vermandois, Picardie, France; died on 18 October 1101 in Tarsus, Mersin Province, Turkey (Asia Minor)

3247. FLORIS OF HOLLAND (Howard Charles's twenty-nine-times-great-grandfather[3241], see Maternal Ancestry(184)) was born in 1017, in Vlaardingen, Vlaardingen, Zuid-Holland, Netherlands, to Thierry III of Holland[3315] and Otelindis Nordmark[3316]. Floris was a Count of Holland. He died on 28 June 1061, aged about 43, in Nederhemert, Zaltbommel, Gelderland, Netherlands. He was buried in Egmond, North Holland, Netherlands.

Floris of Holland[3247], aged about 26, married Gertrude van Sachsen N- Billung, aged about 15, in 1043. They had one daughter:

- Bertha of Holland[3188] born in 1055 in Vlaardingen, Zuid-Holland, Netherlands; died on 15 October 1094 in Montreuil, Nord-Pas-de-Calais, France

3249. ALFONSO VI FERNANDO JIMENO DE CASTILE (Howard Charles's twenty-nine-times-great-grandfather[3243], see Maternal Ancestry(186)) was born in 1040, in Burgos, Castilla-Leon, Spain, to Fernando I de Castile[3317] and Sancha de Leon[3318]. He died in 1109, aged about 69, in Toledo, Castilla-La Mancha, Spain.

3250. CONSTANCE CAPET (Howard Charles's twenty-nine-times-great-grandmother[3244], see Maternal Ancestry(186)) was born in 1046 to Robert I Capet[3319] and Helie de Semur[3320]. She died in 1093, aged about 47.

Alfonso VI Fernando Jimeno de Castile[3249] married Constance Capet. They had one daughter:

- Urraca de Castile[3190] born in 1082 in Burgos, Castilla-Leon, Spain; died in 1125 in Saldana, Castile, Spain

3251. RICHARD DE L'AIGLE (Howard Charles's twenty-nine-times-great-grandfather[3245], see Maternal Ancestry(187)) was born in 1050, in L'Aigle, Orne, Normandy, France, to Engenulphe de L'Aigle[3321] and Richeride de Deine[3322]. He died (Killed by a Norman archer during the siege of the castle of Sainte-Suzanne) on 18 November 1085, aged about 35, in St. Suzanne, Maine, France. He was buried in St Sulpice.

3252. JUDITH D'AVRANCHES (Howard Charles's twenty-nine-times-great-grandmother[3246], see Maternal Ancestry(187)) was born in 1054, in Avranches, Normandy, France. She died in 1100, aged about 46, in St Suzanne, Maine, France.

Richard de L'Aigle[3251] married Judith D'Avranches. They had one son:

- Gilbert de Aigle[3191] born in 1073 in Aigle, Aigle District, Vaud, Switzerland; died on 25 November 1120 in Aboard the White Ship off the coast of Barfleur, Normandy

3253. GEOFFREY II DE PERCHE (Howard Charles's twenty-nine-times-great-grandfather[3247], see Maternal Ancestry(187)) was born in 1042 to Rotrou I de Chateaudun[3323] and Adeline de Domfront[3324]. He died in 1100, aged about 58.

Geoffrey II (died October 1100), Count of Mortagne and Count of Perche, son of Rotrou I, Viscount of Châteaudun, and Adelise de Bellême, daughter of Guérin de Domfront. Geoffrey was Count of Mortagne and Seigneur of Nogent from 1060 to 1090, and Count of Perche from 1090 until his death. Godfrey succeeded his father in 1080, receiving the Percheron fields of his father (Mortagne-au-Perche and Nogent-le-Rotrou), while his younger brother Hugues received Châteaudun. A third brother, Rotrou, acquired by marriage the lordship of Montfort-le-Rotrou. He participated in the conquest of England and fought at the Battle of Hastings. For his service, William the Conqueror gave him a reward of significant property in England. Geoffrey and his two brothers attacked Robert of Bellême, involving a land dispute. Later he tried to attack Belleme again, with the help of Elias I, Count of Maine, but failed. He devoted the rest of his life to religious pursuits, and founded the first leper colony in Perche. Geoffrey married Beatrix de Ramerupt, daughter of Hilduin IV, Count of Montdidier, and Alice de Roucy. Geoffrey and Beatrix had: Rotrou III the Great, Count of Perche Marguerite (d. after 1156), married to Henry de Beaumont, 1st Earl of Warwick. Their son was Rotrou, Archbishop of Rouen.

Juliana du Perche (d. after 1132), married to Gilbert, Lord of d’Aigle. They had two sons, Geoffrey and Engenuf, who died in the wreck of the White Ship. Their daughter was Marguerite de l’Aigle, who married Garcia Ramirez, King of Navarre.
Mathilde (d. 27 May 1143), married first to Raymond I, Vicomte de Turenne, and, widowed, second to Guy IV de Lastours.
Geoffrey was succeeded by his son Rotrou as Count of Perche upon his death.

3254. BEATRIX DE MONTDIDIER (Howard Charles's twenty-nine-times-great-grandmother[3248], see Maternal Ancestry(187)) was born in 1051, in Montdidier, Picardy, France. She died on 2 September 1129, aged about 78, in Somme, Picardy, France.
Geoffrey II de Perche[3253] married Beatrix de Montdidier. They had one daughter:
Julianne du Perche[3192] born in 1070 in Mortagne-au-Perche, Orne, Normandy, France; died in 1109 in Austria-Hungary

3255. FULK IV D’ANJOU (Howard Charles's twenty-nine-times-great-grandfather[3249], see Maternal Ancestry(177) and Maternal Ancestry(188)) was born in 1043, in Anjou, Isere, Rhone-Alpes, France, to Geoffrey II D’Anjou[3325] and Ermengarde D’Anjou[3335]. He died on 14 April 1109, aged about 65, in Anjou, Isere, Rhone-Alpes, France.

Fulk IV (in French Foulques IV) (1043–14 April 1109), called le Réchin, was the Count of Anjou from 1068 until his death. The nickname by which he is usually referred has no certain translation. Philologists have made numerous very different suggestions, including "quarreler", "rude", "sullen", "surly" and "heroic". He was noted to be "a man with many reprehensible, even scandalous, habits" by Orderic Vitalis.
In 1096 Fulk wrote an incomplete history of Anjou and its rulers titled Fragmentum historiae Andegavensis or "History of Anjou." The authorship and authenticity of this work is disputed.[10] Only the first part of the history, describing Fulk's ancestry, is extant. The second part, supposedly describing Fulk's own rule, has not been recovered. If he did write it, it is one of the first medieval works of history written by a layman.
He died in 1109 leaving the restoration of the countship, as it was under Geoffrey Martel, to his successors.

3256. BERTRADE DE MONTFORT (Howard Charles's twenty-nine-times-great-grandmother[3250], see Maternal Ancestry(177) and Maternal Ancestry(188)) was born in 1059, in Montfort-l'Amaury, Yvelines, Ile-de-France, France, to Simon I de Montfort[3235] and Agnaes D'Evreux[3236]. She died on 14 February 1117, aged about 57, in Fontevraud Abbey, Maine-et-Loire, Pays de la Loire, France.
Fulk IV D'Anjou[3255] married Bertrade de Montfort. They had one son:
Fulk V D'Anjou[3193] born in 1092 in Anjou, Isere, Rhone-Alpes, France; died on 13 November 1143 in Acre, Israel

3257. ELIAS I DE MAINE (Howard Charles's twenty-nine-times-great-grandfather[3251], see Maternal Ancestry(178) and Maternal Ancestry(188)) was born in 1060, in Maine, Charente, Poitou-Charentes, France. He died on 11 July 1110, aged about 50, in Anjou, Isère, Rhône-Alpes, France. He was buried in Le Mans, Departement de la Sarthe, Pays de la Loire, France.

3258. MATHILDA DE CHÂTEAU-DU-LOIRE (Howard Charles's twenty-nine-times-great-grandmother[3252], see Maternal Ancestry(178) and Maternal Ancestry(188)) was born in 1055, in Chateau Du, Loire, Loire, Rhône-Alpes, France. She died on 27 March 1099, aged about 43, in Anjou, Isère, Rhône-Alpes, France. She was buried in Le Mans, Departement de la Sarthe, Pays de la Loire, France.
Elias I de Maine[3257] married Mathilda de Château-Du-Loire. They had one daughter:

Ermgarde de Beaugency[3194] born on 1 July 1096 in LeMans, Sarthe, Maine, France; died on 15 January 1126 in Maine, Charente, Poitou-Charentes, France

3259. KING WILLIAM (THE CONQUEROR) OF NORMANDY (Howard Charles's twenty-nine-times-great-grandfather[3253], see Maternal Ancestry(179) and Maternal Ancestry(189)) was born in 1027, in Falaise, France, to Robert I (The Magnificent) of Normandy[3326] and Herleva de Falaise[3327]. William (The Conqueror) became known as 'The Bastard'. The Bastard was a King of England. He died (He was very corpulent, and thrown against the pommel of his saddle his internal organs were ruptured) on 9 September 1087, aged about 60, in Convent of St. Gervais, Rouen, France. He was buried in Abbaye-aux-Hommes, Caen, France.

William I (Old Norman: Williame I; Old English: Wilhelmi I; c. 1028[1] – 9 September 1087), usually known as William the Conqueror and sometimes William the Bastard,[2][a] was the first Norman King of England, reigning from 1066 until his death in 1087. A descendant of Rollo, he was Duke of Normandy (as Duke William II) from 1035 onward. After a long struggle to establish his power, by 1060 his hold on Normandy was secure, and he launched the Norman conquest of England six years later. The rest of his life was marked by struggles to consolidate his hold over England and his continental lands and by difficulties with his eldest son.

William was the son of the unmarried Robert I, Duke of Normandy, by Robert's mistress Herleva. His illegitimate status and his youth caused some difficulties for him after he succeeded his father, as did the anarchy that plagued the first years of his rule. During his childhood and adolescence, members of the Norman aristocracy battled each other, both for control of the child duke and for their own ends. In 1047 William was able to quash a rebellion and begin to establish his authority over the duchy, a process that was not complete until about 1060. His marriage in the 1050s to Matilda of Flanders provided him with a powerful ally in the neighbouring county of Flanders. By the time of his marriage, William was able to arrange the appointments of his supporters as bishops and abbots in the Norman church. His consolidation of power allowed him to expand his horizons, and by 1062 William was able to secure control of the neighbouring county of Maine.

In the 1050s and early 1060s William became a contender for the throne of England, then held by the childless Edward the Confessor, his first cousin once removed. There were other potential claimants, including the powerful English earl Harold Godwinson, who was named the next king by Edward on the latter's deathbed in January 1066. William argued that Edward had previously promised the throne to him, and that Harold had sworn to support William's claim. William built a large fleet and invaded England in September 1066, decisively defeating and killing Harold at the Battle of Hastings on 14 October 1066. After further military efforts William was crowned king on Christmas Day 1066, in London. He made arrangements for the governance of England in early 1067 before returning to Normandy. Several unsuccessful rebellions followed, but by 1075 William's hold on England was mostly secure, allowing him to spend the majority of the rest of his reign on the continent.

William's final years were marked by difficulties in his continental domains, troubles with his eldest son, and threatened invasions of England by the Danes. In 1086 William ordered the compilation of the Domesday Book, a survey listing all the landholders in England along with their holdings. William died in September 1087 while leading a campaign in northern France, and was buried in Caen. His reign in England was marked by the construction of castles, the settling of a new Norman nobility on the land, and change in the composition of the English clergy. He did not try to integrate his various domains into one empire, but instead continued to administer each part separately. William's lands were divided after his death: Normandy went to his eldest son, Robert, and his second surviving son, William, received England.

3260. MATILDA OF FLANDERS (Howard Charles's twenty-nine-times-great-grandmother[3254], see Maternal Ancestry(179) and Maternal Ancestry(189)) was born in 1031. Matilda was a Queen of England. Matilda of Flanders (French: Mathilde de Flandre; Dutch: Mathilda van Vlaanderen) (c. 1031 – 2 November 1083) was the wife of William the Conqueror and, as such, Queen of England. She bore William nine or ten children who survived to adulthood, including two kings, William

II and Henry I.
As a niece and granddaughter of kings of France, Matilda was of grander birth than William, who was illegitimate, and, according to some suspiciously romantic tales, she initially refused his proposal on this account. Her descent from the Anglo-Saxon royal House of Wessex was also to become a useful card. Like many royal marriages of the period, it breached the rules of consanguinity, then at their most restrictive. She was about 20 when they married in 1051/2; William was some three years older, and had been Duke of Normandy since he was about eight.
The marriage appears to have been successful, and William is not recorded to have had any bastards.
Matilda was about 35, and had already produced most of her children, when William embarked on the Norman conquest of England, sailing in his flagship Mora, which Matilda had given him. She governed the Duchy of Normandy in his absence, joining him in England only after more than a year, and subsequently returning to Normandy, where she spent most of the remainder of her life, while William was mostly in his new kingdom. She was about 51 when she died in Normandy in 1083.
Apart from governing Normandy and supporting her brother’s interests in Flanders, Matilda took a close interest in the education of her children, who were unusually well educated for contemporary royalty. The boys were tutored by the Italian Lanfranc, who was made Archbishop of Canterbury in 1070, while the girls learned Latin in Sainte-Trinïté Abbey in Caen, founded by William and Matilda as part of the papal dispensation allowing their marriage.

William (The Conqueror) of Normandy[3259] married Matilda of Flanders. They had one son:

Henry I Beauclerc[3195] born in 1068 in Selby, Yorkshire, England; died on 1 December 1135 in Lyons-la-Forêt, France

3261. KING MALCOLM III OF SCOTLAND (Howard Charles's twenty-nine-times-great-grandfather[3255], see Maternal Ancestry(180) and Maternal Ancestry(189)) was born on 26 March 1031, in Scone Abbey, Perth, Perthshire, Scotland, to Duncan I of Caenmore[3328] and Sybil Fistsward[3329]. Malcolm III was a King of Scotland. He died (Killed in Battle of Alnwick by Morel of Bamborough) on 13 November 1093, aged 62, in Annwick, Northumberland, England. He was buried in First at Tynemouth Priory, then to Holy Trinity Chuch, Dunfermline Abbey, Fifeshire, Scotland.

Malcolm (Gaelic: Máel Coluim; c. 1031 – 13 November 1093) was King of Scots from 1058 to 1093. He was later nicknamed Canmore (ceann mór) in Scottish Gaelic, "Great Chief". (Ceann = leader, "head" [of state]. Mòr = pre-eminent, great, "big".) Malcolm's long reign, lasting 35 years, preceded the beginning of the Scoto-Norman age. He is the historical equivalent of the character of the same name in Shakespeare's Macbeth. Malcolm's kingdom did not extend over the full territory of modern Scotland: the north and west of Scotland remained in Scandinavian, Norse-Gael and Gaelic control, and the areas under the control of the Kings of Scots did not advance much beyond the limits set by Malcolm II until the 12th century. Malcolm III fought a succession of wars against the Kingdom of England, which may have had as their goal the conquest of the English earldom of Northumbria. These wars did not result in any significant advances southwards. Malcolm's main achievement is to have continued a line which would rule Scotland for many years,[3] although his role as "founder of a dynasty" has more to do with the propaganda of his youngest son David, and his descendants, than with any historical reality.
Malcolm's second wife, Margaret of Wessex, was eventually canonized and is Scotland's only royal saint. Malcolm himself gained no reputation for piety; with the notable exception of Dunfermline Abbey, he is not definitely associated with major religious establishments or ecclesiastical reforms.

3262. SAINT MARGARET OF WESSEX (Howard Charles's twenty-nine-times-great-grandmother[3256], see Maternal Ancestry(180) and Maternal Ancestry(189)) was born in 1045, in Hungary, to Edward Aethling[3330] and Agatha of Brunswick[3331]. Margaret was a Saint and Queen of Scotland. She died on 16 November 1093, aged about 48, in Edinburgh Castle, Scotland. She was buried in Dumferline Abbey, Scotland.

Saint Margaret of Scotland (c. 1045 – 16 November 1093), also known as Margaret of Wessex, was an English princess of the House of Wessex. Margaret was sometimes called "The Pearl of Scotland". Born in exile in Hungary, she was the sister of Edgar Ætheling, the short-ruling and uncrowned Anglo-Saxon King of England. Margaret and her family returned to England in 1057, but fled to the Kingdom of Scotland following the Norman conquest of England of 1066.
Around 1070 Margaret married Malcolm III of Scotland, becoming Scottish queen. She was a pious woman, and among many charitable works she established a ferry across the Firth of Forth for pilgrims travelling to Dunfermline Abbey, which gave the towns of South Queensferry and North Queensferry their names. Margaret was the mother of three kings of Scotland (or four, if one includes Edmund of Scotland, who ruled Scotland with his uncle, Donald III) and of a queen consort of England. According to the Life of Saint Margaret, attributed to Turgot of Durham, she died at Edinburgh Castle in 1093, just days after receiving the news of her husband's death in battle. In 1250 she was canonized by Pope Innocent IV, and her remains were reinterred in a shrine at Dunfermline Abbey. Her relics were dispersed after the Scottish Reformation and subsequently lost.

Malcolm III of Scotland married Margaret of Wessex. They had one daughter:

Matilda of Scotland born in 1080 in Dumfernline, Scotland; died on 1 May 1118 in Westminster Palace, London, England

3263. WILLIAM VIII DE ACQUITAINE (Howard Charles's twenty-nine-times-great-grandfather[3257], see Maternal Ancestry(181) and Maternal Ancestry(190)) was born in 1026, in Aquitaine, France, to William V (The Great) de Acquitaine[3332] and Agnes de Bourgogne[3333]. He died on 25 September 1086, aged about 60, in Chizé, Deux-Sevres, Poitou-Charentes, France.

William VIII (c. 1025 – 25 September 1086), was duke of Gascony (1052–1086), and then duke of Aquitaine and count of Poitiers (as William VI) between 1058 and 1086, succeeding his brother William VII (Pierre-Guillaume). Guy-Geoffroy was the youngest son of William V of Aquitaine by his third wife Agnes of Burgundy. He was the brother-in-law of Henry III, Holy Roman Emperor who had married his sister, Agnes de Poitou. He became Duke of Gascony in 1052 during his older brother William VII's rule. Gascony had come to Aquitanian rule through William V's marriage to Prisca (a.k.a. Brisce) of Gascony, the sister of Duke Sans VI Guilhem of Gascony.

William VIII was one of the leaders of the allied army called to help Ramiro I of Aragon in the Siege of Barbastro (1064). This expedition was the first campaign organized by the papacy, namely Pope Alexander II, against a Muslim occupied city in the Emirate of Zaragoza, and the precursor of the later Crusades movement. Aragon and its allies conquered the city, killed its inhabitants and collected an important booty. However, Aragon lost the city again in the following years. During William VIII's rule, the alliance with the southern kingdoms of modern Spain was a political priority as shown by the marriage of all his daughters to Iberian kings. He married three times and had at least five children. After he divorced his first wife due to infertility, he remarried to a much younger woman who was also his cousin. This marriage produced a son, but William VIII had to visit Rome in the early 1070s to persuade the pope to recognize his children from his third marriage as legitimate.

3264. HILDEGARD DE BOURGOGNE (Howard Charles's twenty-nine-times-great-grandmother[3258], see Maternal Ancestry(181) and Maternal Ancestry(190)) was born in 1050, in Burgundy, France, to Robert I de Bourgogne[3334] and Ermengarde D'Anjou[3335]. Hildegard was a Duchess of Burgundy. She died in 1104, aged about 54, in Burgundy, France.

William VIII de Acquitaine married Hildegard de Bourgogne. They had one son:

Baldwin II was the son of Arnulf III, Count of Boulogne and succeeded his father as count circa 990. Both Arnulf III and his father Arnulf II had freed themselves of Flemish rule during the minority of Baldwin IV, Count of Flanders. In 1022 both Baldwin and his son Eustace, along with the counts of Normandy, Valois, and Flanders, met with Robert II, King of France and formed an alliance against Odo II, Count of Blois who was challenging the king's authority. But when Emperor Henry II died in July 1024 the alliance quickly fell apart as King Robert reconciled with count Odo II. In the wake of these changing alliances and for reasons that remain unclear, Baldwin was killed in battle c. 1027 warring with Enguerrand I, Count of Ponthieu, who then wed Baldwin's widow.

He married Adelina of Holland, possibly the daughter of Arnulf, Count of Holland and Lutgardis of Luxemburg, and was the father of:

Eustace I of Boulogne, who succeeded him.

After Baldwin's death Adelina married secondly, Enguerrand I, Count of Ponthieu.

Baldwin de Boulogne married Adelheid van Holland[3271]. They had one son:

Eustace I de Boulogne[3205] born on 11 August 989 in Boulogne-sur-Mer, Nord-Pas-de-Calais, France; died on 4 October 1049 in Neuve-en-Ferrain, Nord, Nord-Pas-de-Calais, France

It is clear, from a passage in Ordericus Vitalis, that the Norman family of Nevil issued from a Teutonic stock, some members of which appear to have offered their services to Richard, second Duke of Normandy, and to have held high office, contracted important alliances, and were actually lords of large fiefs in England previous to the conquest. Baldric Teutonicus was lord of Bacqueville en Caux, and archearius under Duke William. He married a niece of Gilbert Comte de Brionne, grandson of Duke Richard I, and Regent of Normandy in 1040. Ordericus makes frequent mention of Baldric and of his brother Vigerius or Wiger; and a charter by the former shews that he had a sister Elizabeth, who was a nun at St. Amand. This charter being granted with the consent of William, king of the English, proves that Baldric was living at least as late as 1066. By his wife, whose name has not yet transpired, but who, as I have stated, was the niece of the powerful Gilbert Count of Brionne, and therefore a great granddaughter of Richard I, Duke of Normandy.

Balderic The Teuton de Bacqueville married Alix de Brionne. They had one son:
Nicholas de Bacqueville born in 999 in Castle, Martel, Germany; died in 1039

Humbert I (Italian: Umberto I; c. 980 – 1042 or 1047 x 1048), better known as Humbert the White-Handed (French: Humbert aux blanches-mains) or Humbert Whitehand (Italian: Umberto Biancamano)[2] was the founder of the House of Savoy. Of obscure origins, his service to the German emperors Henry II and Conrad II was rewarded with the counties of Maurienne and Aosta and lands in Valais, all at the expense of local bishops and archbishops; a territory which came to be known as the county of Savoy.

Humbert was the son of Amadeus, who may or may not have preceded him as count of Maurienne. His brother was Bishop Otto of Belley. Humbert is the progenitor of the dynasty known as the House of Savoy. The origins of this dynasty are unknown, but Humbert's ancestors are variously said to have come from Saxony, Burgundy or Provence. Given Humbert's close connections with Rudolf III of Burgundy, it is likely that his family were Burgundian, and were descended either from the dukes of Vienne, or from a Burgundian aristocratic family (such as the Guigonids, ancestors of the counts of Albon).

Humbert initially held lands around Belley and in the county of Sermorens, before gaining lands in Aosta and Valais.

Humbert married Ancilla (Auxilia or Ancilia). She may have been Ancilla of Lenzburg, the daughter of the master of ceremonies of Burgundy. Alternatively, Ancilla may have been a daughter of Anselm and Aldiud, and thus a member of a northern Italian dynasty known as the Anselmids. With his wife, Humbert had at least four sons.

3288. ANCELIE D'AOSTE (Howard Charles's thirty-times-great-grandmother[3274], see Maternal Ancestry(159), Maternal Ancestry(185) and Maternal Ancestry(191)) was born in 990, in Geneva, Switzerland. Richard was the eldest son of Robert II Archbishop of Rouen and Count of Évreux and Herleva. Richard, son of the Archbishop Robert, donated a mill at Évreux to the abbey of Jumièges by charter dated [26 Mar 1038/14 Apr 1039]. He is mentioned in a charter of King William I confirming Richard as having been a benefactor to that abbey. Richard and his wife, Godedchildis, founded Saint-Sauveur d'Évreux. He, as Count of Évreux, donated the church of Gravigny to Sainte-Trinité de Rouen, dated [1052/66]. Richard donated the tithe of a town to the abbey of Saint-Taurin.

Some scholars report him as taking part in the battle of Hastings on 14 Oct 1066, but it is unlikely due to his advanced age and death the next year. His son, William, was one of the few known Companions of William the Conqueror at the Battle of Hastings in 1066. William contributed 80 ships to the invasion of England in 1066 as Count of Évreux. Richard died in 1067.

He ruled the Principality of Vladimir in Volhynia in his father's lifetime (from around 1040 to 1054). Yaroslav the Wise, who divided the Kievan Rus' between his five sons in his testament, willed the Principality of Chernigov to Sviatoslav. Sviatoslav joined his brothers, Izyaslav of Kiev and Vsevolod of Pereyaslav, in forming a princely "triumvirate" that oversaw the affairs of Kievan Rus' until 1072. The three brothers together fought against their enemies, including the nomadic Oghuz Turks, and their distant relative, Prince Vseslav of Polotsk. The Cumans defeated their united force in the autumn of 1068, but Sviatoslav routed a Cuman band plundering his principality.

The "triumvirate" broke up, when Sviatoslav, supported by his younger brother Vsevolod, dethroned and replaced their older brother Izyaslav in 1073. He commissioned the compilation of at least two miscellanies of theological works. Otherwise, his short reign was uneventful.

Alexios I Komnenos (1048 or 1056 – 15 August 1118), was Byzantine emperor from 1081 to 1118. Although he was not the founder of the Komnenian dynasty, it was during his reign that the Komnenos family came to full power. Inheriting a collapsing empire and faced with constant warfare during his reign against both the Seljuk Turks in Asia Minor and the Normans in the western Balkans, Alexios was able to curb the Byzantine decline and begin the military, financial, and territorial recovery known as the Komnenian restoration. The basis for this recovery were various reforms initiated by Alexios. His appeals to Western Europe for help against the Turks were also the catalyst that likely contributed to the convoking of the Crusades.

3308. IRENE DOUKAINA (Howard Charles's thirty-times-great-grandmother[3294], see Maternal Ancestry(168) and Maternal Ancestry(175)) was born in 1066 to Andronikos Dukas Protovestiarios[3378] and Marija of Bulgaria[3379]. Irene was an Empress of the Byzantine Empire. She died on 19 February 1133, aged about 66, in Constantinople, Turkey.

Alexios Komnenos Komnenos[3307] married Irene Doukaina. They had one daughter:
Theodora Komnene[3242] born on 15 January 1096 in Trabzon, Turkey; died in 1125 in Constantinople, Turkey

3309. RADBOT OF HABSBURG (Howard Charles's thirty-times-great-grandfather[3295], see Maternal Ancestry(175)) was born on 1 January 980, in Muri. Radbot was a Count of Klettbau. He died in 1027, aged about 47. The following information is also recorded for Radbot. Death(?) in 1027, aged about 47.

Radbot, Count of Habsburg (c. 985 – 1045), also known as Radbot of Klettgau, was Graf (Count) of the county of Klettgau on the High Rhine in Swabia. One of the progenitors of the Habsburg dynasty, Radbot was probably the second son of Lanzelin of Klettgau (son of Guntram, Count in Breisgau) and the younger brother of Bishop Werner I of Strasbourg. In 1010, he married Ida (995–1035), daughter of Duke Frederick I of Upper Lorraine. Their son was named Werner I, Count of Habsburg. Radbot built Habsburg Castle, and in 1027 established Muri Abbey, built up by Benedictine monks descending from Einsiedeln Abbey.

3310. IDA VON LOTHRINGEN (Howard Charles's thirty-times-great-grandmother[3296], see Maternal Ancestry(175)) was born in 995 to Adalbert II of Metz[3404] and Judith van Schwaben[3405]. She died in 1035, aged about 40.

Radbot of Habsburg[3309] married Ida von Lothringen. They had one son:

The kingdom Robert inherited was not large, and in an effort to increase his power, he vigorously pursued his claim to any feudal lands that became vacant, usually resulting in war with a counter-claimant. In 1003, his invasion of the Duchy of Burgundy was thwarted, and it would not be until 1016 that he was finally able to get the support of the Church to be recognized as Duke of Burgundy.

The pious Robert made few friends and many enemies, including his own sons: Hugh, Henry, and Robert. They turned against their father in a civil war over power and property. Hugh died in revolt in 1025. In a conflict with Henry and the younger Robert, King Robert's army was defeated, and he retreated to Beaugency outside Paris, his capital. He died in the middle of the war with his sons on 20 July 1031 at Melun. He was interred with Constance in Saint Denis Basilica and succeeded by his son Henry, in both France and Burgundy.

3312. CONSTANCE DE ARLES (Howard Charles's thirty-times-great-grandmother[3299], see Maternal Ancestry(184), Maternal Ancestry(186) and Maternal Ancestry(190)) was born in 985 to Guillaume de Provence[3382] and Adelaide de Arles[3383]. Constance was a Queen of France. She died on 28 July 1032, aged about 47. She was buried in Basilica of St Denis. St Denis Abbey, St Denis, Se.

Born c. 986 Constance was the daughter of William I, count of Provence and Adelaide-Blanche of Anjou, daughter of Fulk II of Anjou. She was the half-sister of Count William II of Provence. Constance was married to King Robert, after his divorce from his second wife, Bertha of Burgundy. The marriage was stormy; Bertha's family opposed her, and Constance was despised for importing her Provençal kinfolk and customs. Robert's friend, Hugh of Beauvais, tried to convince the king to repudiate her in 1007. Possibly at her request twelve knights of her kinsman, Fulk Nerra, then murdered Beauvais.

In 1010 Robert went to Rome, followed by his former wife Bertha, to seek permission to divorce Constance and remarry Bertha. Pope Sergius IV was not about to allow a consanguineous marriage which had been formally condemned by Pope Gregory V and Robert had already repudiated two wives. So the request was denied. After his return according to one source Robert "loved his wife more."

In the famous trial in 1022 of members of the clergy, including Constance's previous confessor Stephen, on charges of heresy Robert had his wife Queen Constance stand at the door to prevent any mob violence. However, as the condemned clerics left the trial the queen "struck out the eye of Stephen... with the staff which she carried". This was seen as Constance venting her frustration at anyone subverting the prestige of the crown.

At Constance's urging, her eldest son Hugh Magnus was crowned co-king alongside his father in 1017.[7] But later Hugh demanded his parents share power with him, and rebelled against his father in 1025. Constance, however, on learning of her son's rebellion was furious with him, rebuking him at every turn. At some point Hugh was reconciled with his parents but shortly thereafter died, probably about age eighteen.

Robert and Constance quarrelled over which of their surviving sons should inherit the throne; Robert favored their second son Henry, while Constance favored their third son, Robert. Despite his mother's protests and her support by several bishops, Henry was crowned in 1027. Constance, however, was not graceful when she didn't get her way. The ailing Fulbert, bishop of Chartres told a colleague that he could attend the ceremony "if he traveled slowly to Reims—but he was too frightened of the queen to go at all". Constance encouraged her sons to rebel, and they began attacking and pillaging the towns and castles belonging to their father. Son Robert attacked Burgundy, the duchy he had been promised but had never received, and Henry seized Dreux. At last King Robert agreed to their demands and peace was made which lasted until the king's death.

King Robert died on 20 July 1031. Soon afterwards Constance was at odds with both her surviving sons. Constance seized her dower lands and refused to surrender them. Henry fled to Normandy, where he received aid, weapons and soldiers from his brother Robert. He returned to besiege his mother at Poissy but Constance escaped to Pontoise. She only surrendered when Henry began the siege of Le Puiset and swore to slaughter all the inhabitants.

Constance died 28 July 1032. and was buried beside her husband Robert at Saint-Denis Basilica.

Robert II (The Pious) Capet[3311] married Constance de Arles. They had three sons:

Henry I Capet[3245] born on 4 May 1008 in Rheims, France; died on 4 August 1060 in Vitry-en-Brie, France

Robert I de Bourgogne[3334] born in 1011 in Meulan Yvelines France; died in 1076 in Fleury-sur-Ouche, France

3313. YAROSLAV I (THE WISE) OF KIEV (Howard Charles's thirty-times-great-grandfather[3300], see Maternal Ancestry(173) and Maternal Ancestry(184)) was born in 978 to Vladimir The Great of Kiev[3384] and Anna Porphyrogenita[3385]. Yaroslav I (The Wise) was a Grand prince of Veliky Novgorod. He died on 20 February 1054, aged about 75.

Yaroslav I, Grand Prince of Rus', known as Yaroslav the Wise c. 978 – 20 February 1054) was thrice grand prince of Veliky Novgorod and Kiev, uniting the two principalities for a time under his rule. Yaroslav's Christian name was George (Yuri) after Saint George (Old East Slavic: Гюрьг, Gjurĭgī).

A son of the Varangian Grand Prince Vladimir the Great, he was vice-regent of Novgorod at the time of his father's death in 1015. Subsequently, his eldest surviving brother, Sviatopolk I of Kiev, killed three of his other brothers and seized power in Kiev. Yaroslav, with the active support of the Novgorodians and the help of Varangian mercenaries, defeated Svyatopolk and became the Grand Prince of Kiev in 1019. Under Yaroslav the codification of legal customs and princely enactments was begun, and this work served as the basis for a law code called the Russkaya Pravda (“Rus Truth [Law]”). During his lengthy reign, Kievian Rus’ reached the zenith of its cultural flowering and military power.

The early years of Yaroslav's life are shrouded in mystery. He was one of the numerous sons of Vladimir the Great, presumably his second by Rogneda of Polotsk, although his actual age (as stated in the Primary Chronicle and corroborated by the examination of his skeleton in the 1930s) would place him among the youngest children of Vladimir. It has been suggested that he was a child begotten out of wedlock after Vladimir's divorce from Rogneda and marriage to Anna Porphyrogenita, or even that he was a child of Anna Porphyrogenita herself. Yaroslav figures prominently in the Norse sagas under the name Jarisleif the Lame; his legendary lameness (probably resulting from an arrow wound) was corroborated by the scientists who examined his remains.

3314. INGEGERD OLAFSDOTTER (Howard Charles's thirty-times-great-grandmother[3301], see Maternal Ancestry(173) and Maternal Ancestry(184)) was born in 1001, in Sigtune, Sweden, to Olof Skötkonung Eriksson[3386] and Estrid of The Obotrites[3387]. She died on 10 February 1050, aged about 48. She was buried in Saint Sophia's Cathedral in Kyiv or Cathedral of St. Sophia in Novgorod.

Ingegerd Olofsdotter of Sweden also known as Irene, Anna and St. Anna (1001 – 10 February 1050), was a Swedish princess and a Grand Princess of Kiev. She was the daughter of Swedish King Olof Skötkonung and Estrid of the Obotrites and the consort of Yaroslav I the Wise of Kiev.

Ingegerd or St. Anna is often confused with the mother of St. Vladimir “the Enlightener” of the Rus. This is mainly because Ingegerd and Yaroslav also had a son named Vladimir. However, St. Vladimir was actually the father of Ingegerd’s husband Yaroslav I “the Wise”, thus making her St. Vladimir’s daughter-in-law. St. Vladimir is actually the son of Sviatoslav and Malusha.

Yaroslav I (The Wise) of Kiev[3313] married Ingegerd Olafsdotter. They had two children:

Anne of Kiev[3246] born in 1024; died in 1075

Svyatopolk I Yaroslavich of Kiev[3303] born in 1027; died on 27 December 1076

3326. ROBERT I (THE MAGNIFICENT) OF NORMANDY (Howard Charles's thirty-times-great-grandfather[3313], see Maternal Ancestry(179) and Maternal Ancestry(189)) was born on 22 June 1000, in Normandy, France, to Richard II of Normandy[3291] and Judith de Bretagne[3292]. Robert I (The Magnificent) became known as ‘The Magnificent’. The Magnificent was a Duke of Normandy. He died on 1 July 1035, aged 35, in Nicea, Turkey. He was buried in Apulia, Italy.
Robert the Magnificent (French: le Magnifique) (22 June 1000 – 1–3 July 1035), was the Duke of Normandy from 1027 until his death. He was the father of William the Conqueror who became in 1066 King of England and founded the House of Normandy. After making his illegitimate son William his heir, he set out on pilgrimage to Jerusalem. According to the Gesta Normannorum Ducum he travelled by way of Constantinople, reached Jerusalem, fell seriously ill and died on the return journey at Nicaea on 2 July 1035. His son William, aged about eight, succeeded him. According to the historian William of Malmesbury, decades later his son William sent a mission to Constantinople and Nicaea, charging it with bringing his father's body back to Normandy for burial. Permission was granted, but, having travelled as far as Apulia (Italy) on the return journey, the envoys learned that William himself had meanwhile died. They then decided to re-inter Robert's body in Italy.

Herleva (c. 1003 – c. 1050) also known as Herleve, Arlette, Arletta and Arlotte, and Harlette had three sons – William I of England, who was fathered by Robert I, Duke of Normandy, and Odo of Bayeux and Robert, Count of Mortain, who were both fathered by Herluin de Conteville. All became prominent in William's realm. According to one legend, still recounted by tour guides at Falaise, it all started when Robert, the young Duke of Normandy, saw Herleva from the roof of his castle tower. The walkway on the roof still looks down on the dyeing trenches cut into stone in the courtyard below, which can be seen to this day from the tower ramparts above. The traditional way of dyeing leather or garments was to trample barefoot on the garments which were awash in the liquid dye in these trenches. Herleva, legend goes, seeing the Duke on his ramparts above, raised her skirts perhaps a bit more than necessary in order to attract the Duke's eye. The latter was immediately smitten and ordered her brought in (as was customary for any woman that caught the Duke's eye) through the back door. Herleva refused, saying she would only enter the Duke's castle on horseback through the front gate, and not as an ordinary commoner. The Duke, filled with lust, could only agree. In a few days, Herleva, dressed in the finest her father could provide, and sitting on a white horse, rode proudly through the front gate, her head held high. This gave Herleva a semi-official status as the Duke's mistress. She later gave birth to his son, William, in 1027 or 1028. Some historians suggest Herleva was first the mistress of Gilbert of Brionne with whom she had a son, Richard. It was Gilbert who first saw Herleva and elevated her position and then Robert took her for his mistress.

Robert I (The Magnificent) of Normandy was not married to Herleva de Falaise. They had two children:
- William (The Conqueror) of Normandy born in 1027 in Falaise, France; died on 9 September 1087 in Convent of St. Gervais, Rouen, France
- Adelaide de Normandy born in 1027 in Falaise, Calvados, Normandy, France; died in 1089 in Boulogne, Hauts-de-Seine, Île-de-France, France

Duncan I of Caenmore (Howard Charles's thirty-times-great-grandfather), see Maternal Ancestry (180) and Maternal Ancestry (189) was born on 15 August 1001, in Atholl, Perthshire, Scotland, to Crinan Grimus "The Hound" of Mormaer of Atholl and Bethoc Beatrix Mackenneth. Duncan I was a King of Scotland. He died (Killed in action, at Bothnagowan, now Pitgaveny, near Elgin) on 14 August 1040, aged 38, in Moray, Scotland. He was buried in Isle of Iona.

Donnchad mac Crinain (anglicised as Duncan I, and nicknamed An t-Ilgarach, "the Diseased" or "the Sick"; ca. 1001 – 14 August 1040) was king of Scotland (Alba) from 1034 to 1040. He is the historical basis of the "King Duncan" in Shakespeare's play Macbeth. He was son of Crínán, hereditary lay abbot of Dunkeld, and Bethóc, daughter of king Mael Coluim mac Cináeda (Malcolm II).

Unlike the "King Duncan" of Shakespeare's Macbeth, the historical Duncan appears to have been a young man. He followed his grandfather Malcolm as king after the latter's death on 25
November 1034, without apparent opposition. He may have been Malcolm's acknowledged successor or Tánaiste as the succession appears to have been uneventful. Earlier histories, following John of Fordun, supposed that Duncan had been king of Strathclyde in his grandfather's lifetime, between 1018 and 1034, ruling the former Kingdom of Strathclyde as an appanage. Modern historians discount this idea. An earlier source, a variant of the Chronicle of the Kings of Alba (CK-I), gives Duncan's wife the Gaelic name Suthen.[6] Whatever his wife's name may have been, Duncan had at least two sons. The eldest, Malcolm III (Máel Coluim mac Donnchada) was king from 1058 to 1093, the second Donald III (Domnall Bàn, or "Donalbane") was king afterwards. Máel Muire, Earl of Atholl is a possible third son of Duncan, although this is uncertain.

The early period of Duncan's reign was apparently uneventful, perhaps a consequence of his youth. Macbeth (Mac Bethad mac Findláich) is recorded as having been his dux, today rendered as "duke" and meaning nothing more than the rank between prince and marquess, but then still having the Roman meaning of "war leader". In context — "dukes of Francia" had half a century before replaced the Carolingian kings of the Franks and in England the over-mighty Godwin of Wessex was called a dux — this suggests that Macbeth may have been the power behind the throne.

In 1039, Duncan led a large Scots army south to besiege Durham, but the expedition ended in disaster. Duncan survived, but the following year he led an army north into Moray, Macbeth's domain, apparently on a punitive expedition against Moray. There he was killed in action, at Bothnagowan, now Pitgaveny, near Elgin, by the men of Moray led by Macbeth, probably on 14 August 1040. His thought to have been buried at Elgin before later relocation to the Isle of Iona.

Depictions in fiction

Duncan is depicted as an elderly King in Macbeth by William Shakespeare. He is killed in his sleep by the protagonist, Macbeth. In the historical novel Macbeth the King by Nigel Tranter, Duncan is portrayed as a schemer who is fearful of Macbeth as a possible rival for the throne. He tries to assassinate Macbeth by poisoning and then when this fails, attacks his home with an army. In self-defence Macbeth meets him in battle and kills him in personal combat.

In the animated television series Gargoyles he is depicted as a weak and conniving king who assassimates those who he believes threaten his rule. He even tries to assassinate Macbeth. However like in actual history he is killed in battle.

Edward the Exile (1016 – late August 1057), also called Edward Ætheling, was the son of King Edmund Ironside and of Ealdgyth. He spent most of his life in exile following the defeat of his father by Canute the Great. After the Danish conquest of England in 1016, Canute had Edward, said to be only a few months old, and his brother, Edmund, sent to the Swedish court of Olof Skötkonung (who was either Canute's half-brother or stepbrother), supposedly with instructions to have the children murdered. Instead, the two boys were secretly sent either to Kiev, where Olof's daughter Ingigerd was the Queen, or to Poland, where Canute's uncle Boleslaw I Chrobry was duke. Later Edward made his way to Hungary, probably in the retinue of Ingigerd's son-in-law, András in 1046, whom he supported in his successful bid for the Hungarian throne.

On hearing the news of his being alive, Edward the Confessor recalled him to England in 1056 and made him his heir. Edward offered the last chance of an undisputed succession within the Saxon royal house. News of Edward's existence came at a time when the old Anglo-Saxon Monarchy, restored after a long period of Danish domination, was heading for catastrophe. The Confessor, personally devout but politically weak and without children, was unable to make an effective stand against the steady advance of the powerful and ambitious sons of Godwin, Earl of Wessex. From across the Channel William, Duke of Normandy, also had an eye on the succession. Edward the Exile appeared at just the right time. Approved by both king and by the Witan, the Council of the Realm, he offered a way out of the impasse, a counter both to the Godwinsons and to William, and one with a legitimacy that could not be readily challenged. Edward, who had been in the custody of Henry III, the Holy Roman Emperor, finally came back to England at the end of August 1057. But he died within two days of his arrival. The exact cause of Edward’s death remains unclear, but he had many powerful enemies, and there is a strong possibility that he was murdered, although by whom is not known with any certainty. It is known, though, that his access to the king was blocked soon after his arrival in England for some unexplained reason, at a time when the Godwinsons, in the person of Harold, were once again in the ascendant. This turn of events left the throne of England to be disputed by Earl Harold and Duke William, ultimately leading to the Norman Conquest of England. He was buried in Old St Paul’s Cathedral.

Edward Atheling[3330] married Agatha of Brunswick. They had one daughter: Margaret of Wessex[3262] born in 1045 in Hungary; died on 16 November 1093 in Edinburgh Castle, Scotland

William V (THE GREAT) DE ACQUITAINE (Howard Charles's thirty-times-great-grandfather[3320], see Maternal Ancestry(181) and Maternal Ancestry(190)) was born on 29 January 969, in Poitiers, Vienne, Poitou-Charentes, France, to William IV de Acquitaine[3400] and Emma de Blois[3401]. William V (The Great) was a Duke of Aquitaine. He died on 31 January 1030, aged 61. He was buried in Abbey St Cyprian, France.

Nothing is known of Agatha’s early life, and what speculation has appeared is inextricably linked to the contentious issue of Agatha’s paternity, one of the unresolved questions of medieval genealogy. As the birth of her children is speculatively placed at around the year 1045, her own birth was probably before about 1030. She came to England with her husband and children in 1057, but was widowed shortly after her arrival. Following the Norman conquest of England, in 1067 she fled with her children to Scotland, finding refuge under her future son-in-law Malcolm III. While one modern source indicates that she spent her last years as a nun at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, dying before about 1093, Simeon of Durham carries what appears to be the last reference to her in 1070.

William the Great (French: Guillaume le Grand; 969 – 31 January 1030) was duke of Aquitaine (as William V) and count of Poitou (as William II or III) from 990 until his death. Upon the death of the emperor Henry II, he was offered the kingdom of Italy but eventually declined to contest the title against Conrad II. He was the son and successor of William IV by his wife Emma of Blois, daughter of Theobald I of Blois. He seems to have taken after his formidable mother, who ruled Aquitaine as regent until 1004. He was a friend to Bishop Fulbert of Chartres, who found in him another Maecenas, and founded a cathedral school at Poitiers. He himself was very well educated, a collector of books, and turned the prosperous court of Aquitaine into the learning centre of Southern France. Though a cultivated prince, he was a failure in the field. He called in the aid of his suzerain Robert II of France in subduing his vassal, Bosco of La Marche. Together, they yet failed. Eventually, Bosco was chased from the duchy. He had to contain the Vikings who yearly threatened his coast, but in 1006, he was defeated by Viking invaders. He lost the Loudunais and Mirebalais to Fulk Nerra, count of Anjou. He had to give up Confolens, Ruffec, and Chabanais to compensate William II of Angoulême, but Fulbert negotiated a treaty (1020) outlining the reciprocal obligations of vassal and suzerain. However, his court was a centre of artistic endeavour and he its surest patron. His piety and culture brought peace to his vast feudum and he tried to stem the tide of feudal warfare then destroying the unity of many European nations by supporting the current Peace and Truce of God movements initiated by Pope and Church. He founded Maillezais Abbey (1010) and Bourgueil Abbey. He rebuilt the cathedral and many other religious structures in Poitiers after a fire. He travelled widely in Europe, annually visiting Rome or Spain as a pilgrim. Everywhere he was greeted with royal pomp. His court was of an international flavour, receiving ambassadors from the Emperor Henry II, Alfonso V of León, Canute the Great, and even his suzerain, Robert of France.

Upon the death of Henry II without an obvious heir, some of the nobles of the kingdom of Italy looked for a separate candidate to elect rather than maintain their union with Germany by accepting its election of Conrad II. An embassy led by Ulric Manfred, the marquis of Susa, came to France in 1024 and remained for a year, attempting to interest Robert's son Hugh Magnus and then (after Robert's refusal to permit this) William, whose character and court impressed many. William considered the proposal seriously but, upon visiting Italy himself, he found the political situation so unfavorable that he renounced the crown for himself and his heirs. Most of his surviving six letters deal with the Italian proposal. His reign ended in peace and he died on the last (or second to last) day of January 1030 at Maillezais, which he founded and where he is buried. The principal source of his reign is the panegyric of Adhemar of Chabannes.

3333. AGNES DE BOURGOGNE (Howard Charles's thirty-times-great-grandmother[3321], see Maternal Ancestry(181) and Maternal Ancestry(190)) was born in 995. She died on 10 November 1068, aged about 73, in Poitiers, Vienne, Poitou-Charentes, France. She was buried in St. Nicolas de Poitiers.

William V (The Great) de Acquitaine[3332] married Agnes de Bourgogne. They had one son:

William VIII de Acquitaine[3263] born in 1026 in Aquitaine, France; died on 25 September 1086 in Chizé, Deux-Sèvres, Poitou-Charentes, France

3334. ROBERT I DE BOURGOGNE (Howard Charles's thirty-times-great-grandfather[3322], see Maternal Ancestry(181) and Maternal Ancestry(190)) was born in 1011, in Meulan Yvelines France, to Robert II (The Pious) Capet[3311] and Constance de Arles[3312]. Robert I was a Count of Burgundy. He died in 1076, aged about 65, in Fleurey-sur-Ouche, France.

Robert I married twice, including Ermengarde D'Anjou[3335].

Robert I of Burgundy (1011 – 21 March 1076), known as Robert the Old and "Tete-Hardi", was Duke of Burgundy from 1032 to his death. Robert was son of King Robert II of France and brother of Henry I of France.

In 1025, with the death of his eldest brother Hugh Magnus, he and Henry rebelled against their father and defeated him, forcing him back to Paris. In 1031, after the death of his father the king, Robert participated in a rebellion against his brother, in which he was supported by his mother, Constance of Arles. Peace was only achieved when Robert was given Burgundy (1032).

Throughout his reign, he was little more than a robber baron who had no control over his vassals, whose estates he often plundered, especially those of the Church. He seized the income of the diocese of Autun and the wine of the canons of Dijon. He burgled the abbey of St-Germain at Auxerre. In 1048, he repudiated his wife, Helie of Semur followed by the assassination of her brother Joceran and the murdering her father, his father-in-law, Lord Dalmace I of Semur, with his own hands. In that same year, the Bishop of Langres, Harduin, refused to dedicate the church of Sennecy so as not "to be exposed to the violence of the duke." His first son, Hugh, died in battle at a young age and his second son, Henry, also predeceased him. He was succeeded by Henry's eldest son, his grandson, Hugh I.

Robert I de Bourgogne was married.

3335. ERMENGARDE D'ANJOU (Howard Charles's thirty-times-great-grandmother[3323], see Maternal Ancestry(177), Maternal Ancestry(181), Maternal Ancestry(188) and Maternal Ancestry(190)) was born in 1018, in Anjou, Isere, Rhone-Alpes, France, to Fulk III (The Black) D'Anjou[3402] and Hildegarde de Lorraine[3403]. She died on 18 March 1076, aged about 57, in Anjou, Isere, Rhone-Alpes, France.

Ermengarde married twice. She was married to Geoffrey II D'Anjou[3325] and Robert I de Bourgogne[3334].

Ermengarde of Anjou (c. 1018 – 18 March 1076), was a Duchess consort of Burgundy. She was the daughter of Count Fulk III of Anjou and Hildegarde of Sundgau. She was sometimes known as Ermengarde-Blanche.

She married first, c. 1035 Geoffrey II, Count of Gâtinais (in French Geoffroy), called Ferréol and sometimes known as Aubri, seigneur de Château-Landon. Together they had the following children:

Hildegarde de Château-Landon, married c.1060 to Joscelin I, Lord of Courtenay
Geoffrey III, Count of Anjou
Fulk IV, Count of Anjou

She married secondly Robert I, Duke of Burgundy. Together they had one daughter:

Hildegarde (c. 1056–1104), who married Duke William VIII of Aquitaine.

Geoffrey II D'Anjou[3325] married Ermengarde D'Anjou. They had one son:

Fulk IV D'Anjou[3255] born in 1043 in Anjou, Isere, Rhone-Alpes, France; died on 14 April 1109 in Anjou, Isere, Rhone-Alpes, France
Robert I de Bourgogne married Ermengarde D'Anjou. They had one daughter:

Hildegard de Bourgogne[3264] born in 1050 in Burgundy, France; died in 1104 in Burgundy, France

3336. ADALBERT II VON LONGWY-METZ (Howard Charles's thirty-times-great-grandfather[3324], see Maternal Ancestry(150)) was born in 995, in Oberlothringen, to Adalbert II of Metz[3404] and Judith van Schwaben[3405]. He died on 11 November 1048, aged about 53, in Turin.

3337. CLEMENTIA VON FOIX (Howard Charles's thirty-times-great-grandmother[3325], see Maternal Ancestry(150)) was born in 1010. She died in 1050, aged about 40.

Adalbert II von Longwy-Metz[3336] married Clementia von Foix. They had one daughter:

Estefania von Longwy[3266] born in 1030 in Barcelona, Spain; died on 30 June 1088

3338. ARNULF VAN HOLLAND / DE FRIES DE FRIES (Howard Charles's thirty-times-great-grandfather[3326], see Maternal Ancestry(112), Maternal Ancestry(115) and Maternal Ancestry(184)) was born in 951, in Ghent, Flanders, Belgium, to Dirk II (Theodoric) van Holland & West-Friesland[3406] and Hildegard van Vlaanderen[3407]. Arnulf was a Count of Holland. He died on 18 September 993, aged about 42, in Winkelmede. He was buried in Abbey of Egmond aan Zee, Nederland.

Arnulf, also known as Aernout or Arnold succeeded his father in 988 as Count in Frisia. He was born in 951 in Ghent and because of this he is also known as Arnulf of Ghent. Arnulf was the son of Dirk II, Count of Holland and Hildegard, thought to be a daughter of Arnulf of Flanders. Arnulf is first mentioned (together with his parents) in 970. Like his father, his name appears in numerous Flemish documents at the time. In 983 Arnulf accompanied Emperor Otto II and future Emperor Otto III on their journey to Verona and Rome. As count he managed to expand his territories southwards. Arnulf donated several properties to Egmond Abbey, amongst others Hillegersberg (which was previously called Bergan, but renamed after Arnulf's mother) and Overschie, which may have been rewards for the land-clearing activities of the monks of Egmond.

Arnulf was the first count to come into conflict with the West-Frisians and in 993 he invaded deep into their territory, but on 18 September of that year he was defeated and killed in a battle near Winkel in West-Friesland. His son Dirk was still a boy at this time, but Arnulf's widow Luitgard managed to retain the county for her son with support from first Emperor Otto III and later her brother-in-law, Emperor Henry II.

In May 980 Arnulf married Lutgard of Luxemburg, a daughter of Siegfried, Count of Luxemburg. The couple had (at least) two sons; the future Count Dirk III and Siegfried (also known as Sicco). Arnulf, his wife and his sons were all buried at Egmond.

He also had a daughter, Adelina of Holland, who was married to Baldwin II, Count of Boulogne and Enguerrand I, Count of Ponthieu.

On 20 September 993 Lutgard donated her properties at Rugge to Saint Peter's abbey of Ghent for the soul of her husband. In June 1005 she made peace with the West-Frisians through mediation by Emperor Henry.

3339. LUITGARDE DE LUXEMBURG (Howard Charles's thirty-times-great-grandmother[3327], see Maternal Ancestry(112), Maternal Ancestry(115) and Maternal Ancestry(184)) was born in 955, in Cleves, Kleve, Nordrhein-Westfalen, Germany, to Sigfried of The Ardennes[3408] and Hedwig of Nordgau[3409]. Luitgarde was a Countess of Holland. She died on 14 May 1005, aged about 49, in Egmond Binnen, Noord Holland, Netherlands. She was buried in Abbey of Egmond aan Zee, Nederland.

Lutgardis of Luxembourg, also known as Liutgardis, Liutgarde and Lutgard, (955 – ca. 1005 or possibly later) was a daughter of Siegfried of Luxembourg and Hedwig of Nordgau. Her sister was Cunigunde of Luxembourg. She married Arnulf, Count of Holland. They had three children:

Dirk III of Holland, for whom she acted as regent from 993 to 1005
Siegfried of Holland (985–1030), married Thetburga (985–)
Adelina of Holland

As the sister-in-law of Emperor Henry II, she enjoyed considerable influence. With his help she managed to maintain the county for her son Dirk III, acting as regent.

On 20 September 993, Lutgard donated her properties at Rugge to Saint Peter's abbey of Ghent for the soul of her husband. According to Thietmar's Chronicle, possibly in June 1005, she made peace with the West-Frisians through mediation by Emperor Henry. The date of Lutgardis' death is not clear in view of conflicting sources including Annales Egmundani. It may well have been in 1005 or even later. She was buried in Egmont.

Arnulf van Holland / de Fries de Fries[3338] married Luitgarde de Luxemburg. They had four children:
Adelheid van Holland[3271] born in 975 in Ghent, Vlaams Gewest, Belgium; died on 20 November 1052 in Rue d'Artois, Boulogne, Nord-Pas-de-Calais, France
Baldwin de Boulogne[3272] born in 976 in Boulogne, Pas-De-Calais, France; died in 1033 in Abbaye De Samur, Aux-Bois, France
Siegfried van Holland / de Fries de Fries[3267] born in 980 in Ghent, Flanders, Belgium; died on 5 June 1030 in Egmond Binnen, Noord Holland, Netherlands
Thierry III of Holland[3315] born in 980 in Vlaardingen, Zuid Holland, Netherlands; died in 1039 in Egmond, Noord-Holland, Nederland

3342. ROBERT (ARCHBISHOP OR ROUEN) D'EVREUX (Howard Charles's thirty-times-great-uncle[3348]) was born in 964 to Richard I of Normandy[3364] and Gunnora of Normandy[3365]. He died in 1037, aged about 73.

3343. HERLÈVE DE ROUEN (Howard Charles's thirty-times-great-aunt by marriage[3411]) was born in 964. She died in 1050, aged about 86.
Robert (Archbishop Or Rouen) D'Evreux[3342] married Herlève de Rouen. They had one son:
Robert (Archbishop) D'Evreux[3275] born in 1008 in Rouen, Seine-Maritime, Haute-Normandie, France; died in 1067 in Seine Inferieure, Eure, Normandy, France

3344. EMMA OF NORMANY (Howard Charles's thirty-times-great-aunt[3349]) was born on 23 June 985, in Normandy, France, to Richard I of Normandy[3364] and Gunnora of Normandy[3365]. Emma was a Queen of England. She died on 6 March 1052, aged 66, in Winchester, Hampshire, England.
Emma married twice. She was married to Aethelred II Of Wessex (The Unready) of England[3345] and Cnut The Great of England[3346].

3345. AETHELRED II OF WESSEX (THE UNREADY) OF ENGLAND (Howard Charles's thirty-times-great-uncle by marriage[3414]) was born in 968, in Wessex, England. He died on 23 April 1016, aged about 47, in London, Middlesex, England. He was buried in Old St Paul's Cathedral.
Aethelred II Of Wessex (The Unready) of England, aged about 33, married Emma of Nornany[3344], aged 16, on 5 April 1002 in Winchester, Hampshire, England.

3346. CNUT THE GREAT OF ENGLAND (Howard Charles's thirty-times-great-uncle by marriage[3415]) was born in 995, in Denmark. He died in 1035, aged about 40, in Shaftsbury, Dorsetshire, England. He was buried in Winchester Cathedral, London, England.

Cnut the Great c. 995 – 12 November 1035), also known as Canute, whose father was Swen Forkbeard (which gave him the patronym Sveynsson, Old Norse: Sveinsson), was King of Denmark, England and Norway; together often referred to as the North Sea Empire. Yet after the deaths of his heirs within a decade of his own, and the Norman conquest of England in 1066, this legacy was lost. He is popularly invoked in the context of the legend of King Canute and the tide, which usually misrepresents him as a deluded monarch believing he has supernatural powers, contrary to the original legend which portrays a wise king who rebuked his courtiers for their fawning behaviour.
As a Danish prince, Cnut won the throne of England in 1016 in the wake of centuries of Viking activity in northwestern Europe. His later accession to the Danish throne in 1018 brought the crowns of England and Denmark together. Cnut sought to keep this power-base by uniting Danes and English under cultural bonds of wealth and custom, as well as through sheer brutality. After a decade of conflict with opponents in Scandinavia. Cnut claimed the crown of Norway in Trondheim in 1028. The Swedish city Sigtuna was held by Cnut (he had coins struck there that called him king, but there is no narrative record of his occupation).

Dominion of England lent the Danes an important link to the maritime zone between the islands of Great Britain and Ireland, where Cnut, like his father before him, had a strong interest and wielded much influence among the Norse–Gaels.[6] Cnut’s possession of England’s dioceses and the continental Diocese of Denmark—with a claim laid upon it by the Holy Roman Empire’s Archdiocese of Hamburg-Bremen—was a source of great prestige and leverage within the Catholic Church and among the magnates of Christendom (gaining notable concessions such as one on the price of the pallium of his bishops, though they still had to travel to obtain the pallium, as well as on the tolls his people had to pay on the way to Rome). After his 1026 victory against Norway and Sweden, and on his way back from Rome where he attended the coronation of the Holy Roman Emperor, Cnut, in a letter written for the benefit of his subjects, deemed himself "King of all England and Denmark and the Norwegians and of some of the Swedes". The Anglo-Saxon kings used the title "king of the English". Cnut was ealles Engla landes cyning—"king of all England". Medieval historian Norman Cantor called him "the most effective king in Anglo-Saxon history".

Cnut The Great of England, aged about 22, married Emma of Normandy[3344], aged 32, on 2 July 1017 in Denmark.

3347. GEOFFREY DE BRETAGNE (Howard Charles’s thirty-times-great-great-uncle[3352]) was born in 980, in Rennes, Ille-et-Vilaine, Bretagne, France, to Conan (The Crooked) de Bretagne[3366] and Ermengarde-Gerberga D’Anjou[3367]. Geoffrey was a Duke of Brittany. He died on 20 November 1008, aged about 28, in Rome, Italy.

Geoffrey was the son of Duke Conan I, by his marriage to Ermengarde-Gerberga of Anjou. He was the grandson of Judicael Berengar, Count of Rennes. When Geoffrey succeeded to Brittany he had several problems: Blois was encroaching on his territory, Vikings were threatening his shores, and he had to decide whether to accept the protection offered by Anjou. In 996, at about the age of sixteen, Geoffrey entered into a dynastic alliance with Richard II, Duke of Normandy, with a diplomatic double marriage between the two houses. The church-sanctioned marriage ceremonies were held at Mont Saint-Michel, on the Breton-Norman border, and while Geoffrey married Hawise of Normandy, daughter of Richard I of Normandy and sister of Richard II, Richard married Judith of Brittany, Geoffrey’s sister.

Geoffrey and Hawise had four children:
Alan III of Brittany (997-1040)
Evenus (born c. 998, died after 1037)
Odo, Count of Penthièvre (died 1079)
Adela, Abbess of Saint-Georges

Geoffrey died on 20 November 1008 while travelling on a pilgrimage to Rome.

3348. HAWISE DE NORMANDIE (Howard Charles’s thirty-times-great-great-aunt by marriage[3418]) was born in 978, in Rouen, Seine Maritime, Normandy, France. She died on 21 February 1034, aged about 55, in Rennes, Ille-et-Vilaine, Bretagne, France.

Geoffrey de Bretagne[3347] married Hawise de Normandie.

A William Peverel is listed in the Roll of Battle Abby as a companion of William the Conqueror at Hastings in 1066, and the Domesday Book of 1086 mentions a Ranulph Peverel as holding many tracts of land throughout England[2]. Other Peverels are associated with the castle at Whittington in the 11th and 12th centuries. Historians claim the family derived from a "Wrenoc" and identify him with the clan of Tudor Trevor.

One persistent but unverifiable tradition holds that the earliest William Peverel was the son of William the Conqueror by a Saxon princess, born before his marriage to Matilda of Flanders. And says Ranulph was the husband of that Saxon lady who fathered several half-siblings of her first child. Most would identify this Ranulph as identical to "Wrenoc" (which they claim is the same name as "Gronwy" in Welsh) and a son of Tudor ap Rhys Sais[4]. And the Saxon princess is usually called Maud, daughter of Ingelric; the latter supposedly being a base son of Aethelred the Unready. While Rhys Sais did hold Whittington before the conquest and his son Tudor appears in the Domesday Book as a tenant of lands held under Earl Roger de Montgomery, the chronology connecting that Welsh family to the Peverel's is flawed.

Ranulph Peverel de Wrenroc married Herleva de Falaise[3327]. They had one son:

Adalbert was born between 932 and 936, the son of Berengar, then margrave of Ivrea, and Willa, daughter of Boso, margrave of Tuscany. In 950, he and his father were simultaneously elected by the high nobility to succeed Lothar II of Italy. They were crowned together in the basilica of Saint Michael in Pavia on 15 December. Berengar tried to force Adelaide, widow of Lothar, to marry Adalbert and cement their claim to joint kingship.

Failing in his second attempt to regain his kingdom, Adalbert began a long series of negotiations with the Byzantine Empire, which was threatened by Otto's designs on southern Italy. When these fell through, he retired with his wife Gerberga to her family's estates in Burgundy. Adalbert died at Autun, either on 30 April 971 or between 972 and 975. He had been married to Gerberga, eldest daughter of Count Lambert of Chalon, around 956, and they had one son, Otto-William, who succeeded to the county of Mâcon through marriage to the widow of the previous count. This has led some scholars to mistakenly conclude that Gerberga must have been related to the counts of Mâcon. After Adalbert's death, Gerberga married Henry I, Duke of Burgundy. Henry adopted Otto-William and left him the county of Burgundy. Otto-William was even offered the Italian crown after the death of Arduin in 1015, although he did not accept.

Sixteen diplomas issued jointly with his father and three issued by himself alone have survived from Adalbert's reign. They have been edited and published. Berengar and Adalbert had silver denarii minted at Pavia.

Richard I (28 August 932 – 20 November 996), also known as Richard the Fearless, was the Count of Rouen or Jarl of Rouen from 942 to 996. Dudo of Saint-Quentin, whom Richard commissioned to write the “De moribus et actis primorum Normanniae ducum” (Latin, "On the Customs and Deeds of the First Dukes of Normandy"), called him a Dux. However, this use of the word may have been in the context of Richard’s renowned leadership in war, and not as a reference to a title of nobility. Richard either introduced feudalism into Normandy or he greatly expanded it. By the end of his reign, the most important Norman landholders held their lands in feudal tenure.

Richard used marriage to build strong alliances. His marriage to Emma of Paris connected him directly to the House of Capet. His second wife, Gunnora, from a rival Viking group in the Cotentin, formed an alliance to that group, while her sisters formed the core group that were to provide loyal followers to him and his successors.

His daughters forged valuable marriage alliances with powerful neighboring counts as well as to the king of England. Emma married firstly Æthelred the Unready and after his death in 1016, the invader, Cnut the Great. Her children included Edward the Confessor, Alfred Aetheling and with Cnut, Harthacnut, so completing a major link between the Duke of Normandy and the Crown of England that would add validity to the claim by William the Conqueror to the throne of England.

Richard also built on his relationship with the church, undertaking acts of piety, lv restoring their lands and ensuring the great monasteries flourished in Normandy. His further reign was marked by an extended period of peace and tranquility.

3365. GUNNORA OF NORMANDY (Howard Charles’s thirty-one-times-great-grandmother[3346], see Maternal Ancestry(143), Maternal Ancestry(150), Maternal Ancestry(161), Maternal Ancestry(185), Maternal Ancestry(186), Maternal Ancestry(189), Maternal Ancestry(191) and Maternal Ancestry(218)) was born on 21 November 936, in Rouen, Normandy, France, to Herbastus “Le Danois” de Crépon[3420] and Gyrithe Cyrid Olafsdotter[3421]. Gunnora was a Duhess of Normandy. She died on 5 January 1031, aged 94, in Fécamp, Seine-Maritime, Haute-Normandie, France. She was buried in Normandy, France.

The names of Gunnora’s parents are unknown, but Robert of Torigni wrote that her father was a forester from the Pays de Caux and according to Dudo of Saint-Quentin she was of noble Danish origin. Gunnora was probably born c. 950. Her family held sway in western Normandy and Gunnora herself was said to be very wealthy. Her marriage to Richard I was of great political importance, both to her husband[b] and her progeny. [5] Her brother, Herfast de Crepon, was progenitor of a great Norman family. Her sisters and nieces[c] married some of the most important nobles in Normandy.

Robert of Torigni recounts a story of how Richard met Gunnora. She was living with her sister Seinfreda, the wife of a local forester, when Richard, hunting nearby, heard of the beauty of the forester’s wife. He is said to have ordered Seinfreda to come to his bed, but the lady substituted her unmarried sister, Gunnora. Richard, it is said, was pleased that by this subterfuge he had been saved from committing adultery and together they had three sons and three daughters.

Unlike other territorial rulers, the Normans recognized marriage by cohabitation or more danico. But when Richard was prevented from nominating their son Robert to be Archbishop of Rouen, the two were married, “according to the Christian custom”, making their children legitimate in the eyes of the church.

Gunnora attested ducal charters up into the 1020s, was skilled in languages and was said to... have had an excellent memory. She was one of the most important sources of information on Norman history for Dudo of St. Quentin. As Richard’s widow she is mentioned accompanying her sons on numerous occasions. That her husband depended on her is shown in the couple’s charters where she is variously regent of Normandy, a mediator and judge, and in the typical role of a medieval aristocratic mother, an arbitrator between her husband and their oldest son Richard II.

Gunnora was a founder and supporter of Coutances Cathedral and laid its first stone. In one of her own charters after Richard’s death she gave two alods to the abbey of Mont Saint-Michel, namely Britavilla and Domjean, given to her by her husband in dower, which she gave for the soul of her husband, and the weal of her own soul and that of her sons "count Richard, archbishop Robert, and others..." She also attested a charter, c. 1024–26, to that same abbey by her son, Richard II, shown as Gonnor matris comitis (mother of the count). Gunnora, both as wife and countess, was able to use her influence to see her kin favored, and several of the most prominent Anglo-Norman families on both sides of the English Channel are descended from her, her sisters and nieces. Gunnora died c. 1031.

Richard I of Normandy[3364] married Gunnora of Normandy. They had five children:

- Geoffrey de Brionne[3340] born in 953 in Brionne, Eure, Haute-Normandie, France; died on 25 August 1015 in Brionne, Eure, Haute-Normandie, France
- Richard II of Normandy[3291] born on 23 August 963 in Normandy, France; died on 28 August 1027 in Normandy, France
- Robert (Archbishop Of Rouen) D'Evreux[3342] born in 964; died in 1037
- Robert (Archbishop Of Rouen) D'Evreux[3372] born in 979 in Evreux, Eure, Normandy, France; died on 16 March 1037 in Rouen, Seine Inferieure, Normandy, France
- Emma of Normany[3344] born on 23 June 985 in Normandy, France; died on 6 March 1052 in Winchester, Hampshire, England

Ermengarde-Gerberga was born c. 956, the daughter of Geoffrey I, Count of Anjou and Adele of Meaux. She married Conan I of Rennes, Count of Rennes, in 973. Her husband Conan of Rennes opposed her father and brother Fulk even though the marriage was apparently designed to form a political alliance between Anjou and Brittany. Even after Conan had been killed by Fulk at the Battle of Conquereuil in 992, and during the period 992-994 when Ermengarde was Regent for their son Geoffrey, she remained loyal to her brother Fulk III, Count of Anjou. In 992, following the interests of her brother, and functioning as Regent, she accepted Capetian over-lordship for Rennes while rejecting that of Odo I, Count of Blois. About 1000 her brother Fulk III arranged his widowed sister to marry, secondly, William II of Angoulême, one of his close allies.

Conan (The Crooked) de Bretagne[3366] married Ermengarde-Gerberga D'Anjou. They had two children:

- Geoffrey de Bretagne[3347] born in 980 in Rennes, Ille-et-Vilaine, Bretagne, France; died on 20 November 1008 in Rome, Italy
- Judith de Bretagne[3329] born in 982 in Rennes, Ille-et-Vilaine, Bretagne, France; died on 16 June 1017 in Normandy, France

Zoe was born when her father was nominal co-emperor to his brother Basil II. She lived a life of relative obscurity until her uncle died when Zoe was 47, leaving the Byzantine throne entirely to her father. As he had no sons, Constantine hoped to continue the dynasty by marrying off one of his daughters. Zoe, aged 50, was married to Romanos Argyros. Zoe and her husband took the throne three days later on her father's death. The marriage was troubled and after five years Romanos III was found dead in his bath. His death has been variously attributed to Zoe, her young lover Michael, or both. They were married on the same day as the murder, and he was crowned emperor on the following day. Seven years later, Zoe was persuaded to adopt her dying husband's nephew, also named Michael. Once Michael V became emperor, he promptly exiled Zoe. Michael V's action sparked a popular revolt which dethroned him and installed Zoe and Theodora as joint empresses. After a two-month joint reign Zoe married a former lover who was installed as Constantine IX Monomachos, transferring power to him. Exactly eight years later, Zoe died aged 72.

Constantine IX Monomachos[3368] married Zoe Porphyrogenita. They had one daughter:

John Komnenos married Anna Dalassene, the daughter of Alexios Charon, most likely in 1044. Anna, born c. 1028, long outlived her husband and after his death ran the family as its undisputed matriarch. Anna became involved in conspiracies against the Doukas family, whom she never forgave for taking the throne in 1059. Later she also played a major role in the successful overthrow of Nikephoros III Botaneiates (r. 1078–81) and the rise of her son Alexios to the throne. After that, and for about fifteen years, she served as the virtual co-ruler of the empire along her son. She then retired to a monastery, where she died in 1100 or 1102. With Anna, John had eight children, five boys and three girls:

Manuel Komnenos (c. 1045 – 1071), kouropalates and protostrator, married a relative of Romanos IV Diogenes (r. 1068–71)

Maria Komnene (c. 1047 – after 1094), married the panhypersebastos Michael Taronites

Isaac Komnenos (c. 1050 – 1102/4), sebastokrator, married Irene, daughter of the ruler of Alania

Eudokia Komnene (c. 1052 – before 1136), married Nikephoros Melissenos

Theodora Komnene (c. 1054 – before 1136), married the kouropalates Constantine Diogenes, son of Romanos IV

Alexios Komnenos (1057–1118), the future emperor, married Irene Doukaina

Adrianos Komnenos (c. 1060 – 1105), protosebastos, married Zoe Doukaina

Nikephoros Komnenos (c. 1062 – after 1136), pansebastos sebastos and droungarios of the fleet.*

John Komnenos[3376] married Anna Dalassene. They had one son:

In 1071 Andronikos was the commander of a section of the Byzantine army in the campaign of Romanos IV Diogenes against the Seljuk Turks of Alp Arslan. Commanding the rearguard of the army during the Battle of Manzikert, Andronikos announced that the emperor had been cut down and deserted from the battlefield. He was widely blamed for causing the crushing defeat of the Byzantine forces and the subsequent capture of Romanos IV by the enemy.

In 1072, after Romanos had been released by Alp Arslan, Andronikos and his brother Constantine were sent out by Michael VII and their father the Caesar John to intercept him. They defeated Romanos and hunted him down in Cilicia. It was Andronikos who finally obtained Romanos' surrender and conducted him towards Constantinople. In spite of his former hatred for the deposed emperor, Andronikos is said to have opposed his blinding on 29 June 1072.

In an act of 1073, he is recorded with his titles as protopropodros, protovestiarios and megas domestikos, which Michael Attaleiates clarifies as being the post of domestikos ton scholon of the East, which he had been given when sent against Diogenes.

In 1074, together with his father, Andronikos commanded the imperial army against the rebel mercenaries led by Roussel de Bailleul. Both were captured by the rebels, who released the badly wounded Andronikos to allow him to seek proper medical treatment in Constantinople. There he recovered for a few years, but in October 1077 died of an edema.

income was used to support her husband's lavish lifestyle and political ambitions. As the last descendants of the ruling family of Bulgaria, Maria and her daughters Irene and Anna, who married the first notable member of the Palaiologos family, carried not only immense wealth but also legitimisation of Byzantine authority over the Bulgarian population: her (and her daughters') prominent marriages are evidence for the eventual integration of the descendants of the Cometopuli dynasty into the court nobility in Constantinople. As mother of the Empress Irene Doukaina, Maria was a woman of some influence in the early years of the reign of Alexios I Komnenos, although she, as a widow, shunned the Imperial court and chose to live in her Lake Ohrid estate. Hugh Capet (c. 941 – 24 October 996) was the first King of the Franks of the House of Capet from his election in 987 until his death. He succeeded the last Carolingian king, Louis V. The son of Hugh the Great, Duke of the Franks, and Hedwige of Saxony, daughter of the German king Henry the Fowler, Hugh was born in 941. Hugh Capet was born into a well-connected and powerful family with many ties to the royal houses of France and Germany. Through his mother, Hugh was the nephew to Otto I, Holy Roman Emperor; Henry I, Duke of Bavaria; Bruno the Great, Archbishop of Cologne; and finally, Gerberga of Saxony, Queen of France. Gerberga was the wife of Louis IV, King of France and mother of Lothair of France and Charles, Duke of Lower Lorraine.

His paternal family, the Robertians, were powerful landowners in the Île-de-France. His grandfather had been King Robert I. King Odo was his granduncle and King Rudolph was his uncle by affinity. Hugh's paternal grandmother was a descendant of Charlemagne.

Adelaide was the daughter of William III, Duke of Aquitaine and Adele of Normandy, daughter of Rollo of Normandy. Her father used her as security for a truce with Hugh Capet, whom she married in 969. In 987, after the death of Louis V, the last Carolingian king of France, Hugh was elected the new king with Adelaide as queen. They were proclaimed at Senlis and blessed at Noyon. They were the founders of the Capetian dynasty of France. Hugh apparently trusted in her judgement and allowed her to take part in government: he proposed her to negotiate for him with the regent of the German Empire, empress Theophanu, committing himself beforehand to their agreement.

Hugh Capet married Adelaide Aquitaine. They had one son:

William I (c. 950 – after 29 August 993), called the Liberator, was Count of Provence from 968 to his abdication. In 975 or 979, he took the title of marchio or margrave. He is often considered the founder of the county of Provence. He and his elder brother Rotbold I were sons of Boso II of Arles and his wife Constance, who, based on her name, has been speculated to be daughter of Charles Constantine of Vienne. They both carried the title of comes or count concurrently, but it is unknown if they were joint-counts of the whole of Provence or if the region was divided. His brother never bore any other title than count so long as William lived.
so the latter seems to have attained a certain supremacy. In 980, he was installed as Count of Arles. His sobriquet comes from his victories against the Saracens by which he liberated Provence from their threat, which had been constant since the establishment of a base at Fraxinet. At the Battle of Tourtour in 973, with the assistance of the counts of the High Alps and the viscounts of Marseille and Fos, he definitively routed the Saracens, chasing them forever from Provence. He reorganised the region east of the Rhône, which he conquered from the Saracens and which had been given him as a gift from King Conrad of Burgundy. Also by royal consent, he and his descendants controlled the fisc in Provence. With Isarn, Bishop of Grenoble, he repopulated Dauphiné and settled an Italian count named Ugo Blavia near Fréjus in 970 in order to bring that land back to cultivation. For all this, he figures prominently in Ralph Glaber's chronicle with the title of dux and he appears in a charter of 992 as pater patriae.

He donated land to Cluny and retired to become a monk, dying at Avignon, where he was buried in the church of Saint-Croix at Sarrians. He was succeeded as margrave by his brother. His great principality began to diminish soon after his death as the castles of his vassals, which he had kept carefully under ducal control, soon became allocs of their possessors.

3383. ADELAIDE DE ARLES (Howard Charles's thirty-one-times-great-grandmother[3368], see Maternal Ancestry(184), Maternal Ancestry(186) and Maternal Ancestry(190)) was born in 945 to Fulk II D'Anjou[3438] and Gerberge du Maine-Gatinais[3439]. She died in 1026, aged about 81.

Guillaume de Provence[3382] married Adelaide de Arles. They had one daughter:
Constance de Arles[3312] born in 985; died on 28 July 1032

3384. VLADIMIR THE GREAT OF KIEV (Howard Charles's thirty-one-times-great-grandfather[3369], see Maternal Ancestry(184)) was born in 958, in Budyatychi, Ukraine, to Siwatoslav I of Kiev[3434] and Malusha Lubech[3435]. Vladimir The Great was a Saint and Grand Prince of Kiev. He died on 15 July 1015, aged about 57, in Kiev, Ukraine.

Vladimir the Great (also (Saint) Vladimir of Kiev; c. 958 – 15 July 1015, Berestove) was a prince of Novgorod, grand prince of Kiev, and ruler of Kievan Rus' from 980 to 1015. Vladimir's father was prince Siwatoslav of the Rusir dynasty. After the death of his father in 972, Vladimir, who was then prince of Novgorod, was forced to flee to Scandinavia in 976 after his brother Yaropolk had murdered his other brother Oleg and conquered Rus'. In Sweden, with the help from his relative Ladejarl Håkon Sigurdsson, ruler of Norway, he assembled a Varangian army and reconquered Novgorod from Yaropolk. By 980, Vladimir had consolidated the Kievan realm from modern-day Belarus, Russia and Ukraine to the Baltic Sea and had solidified the frontiers against incursions of Bulgarian, Baltic tribes and Eastern nomads. Originally a follower of Slavic paganism, Vladimir converted to Christianity in 988 and Christianized the Kievan Rus'.

3385. ANNA PORPHYROGENITA (Howard Charles's thirty-one-times-great-grandmother[3370], see Maternal Ancestry(184)) was born on 13 March 963 to Siwatoslav I of Kiev[3434] and Malusha Lubech[3435]. Anna was a Grand Princess consort of Kiev. She died in 1011, aged about 48.

He was the eldest son of Geoffroy I of Semur (c. 942 - c. 1000), lord of Semur-en-Brionnais, and his first wife, a daughter of Dalmace II, Viscount of Brioude (c. 935 - 960).

His son-in-law, Robert I, Duke of Burgundy killed him in a dispute, the cause of which is uncertain. Robert was known to be a violent man of explosive temper. It is unclear what method was used to kill Dalmas, but Hildebert de Lavardin, a contemporary, reported that the duke killed his father-in-law "propia manu," which has led some historians to suppose Dalmas lost his life in battle over the territory of Auxerrois (fr). However, given that Dalmas's son Josserand was killed by "two of the Duke's soldiers" while trying to break up a fight, it seems the scene of the murder may have been more intimate. It has been theorized based on figures on the tympanum on the gates of Notre-Dame de Semur-en-Auxois, realized sometime after 1250, that Dalmas was poisoned during a banquet attended by his son-in-law. This church in a namesake town, almost 170 kilometers from the seat of Dalmas' power, was funded by Duke Robert I to assuage his guilt and atone for killing his wife's (and the local bishop's) father.

3391. AREMBURGE DE VERGY (Howard Charles's thirty-one-times-great-grandmother[3376], see Maternal Ancestry(186)) was born in 980. She died in 1060, aged about 80.

GEOFFROY I D'ANJOU (Howard Charles's thirty-one-times-great-grandfather[3377], see Maternal Ancestry(161), Maternal Ancestry(177), Maternal Ancestry(188) and Maternal Ancestry(190)) was born on 11 November 940, in Anjou, France, to Fulk II D'Anjou[3438] and Gerberge du Maine-Gatinais[3439]. Geoffroy I became known as ‘Grey Gown’. Grey Gown was a Count of Anjou. He died in 962, aged about 21, in Marçon, France.

Geoffrey was the eldest son of Fulk II, Count of Anjou and his first wife Gerberga. He succeeded his father as Count of Anjou about 960, at the age of 20. He married Adele of Meaux (934–982), daughter of Robert of Vermandois and Adelais de Vergy.[2] On her mother's side she was a granddaughter of king Robert I of France and on her father's side a direct descendant of Charlemagne. Through this marriage the Angevins joined the highest ranks of the French royal family.

Geoffrey started by making his power-base the citadel of Angers strategically placing his fideles in key areas surrounding the city to protect his territories. The lands of the abbeys of Saint-Aubin and Saint-Serge in Angers provided the beneficium for his most faithful adherents. On this subject which became this family's theme, Geoffrey advised both his sons, Fulk and Maurice: "No house is weak that has many friends. Therefore I admonish you to hold dear those fideles who have been friends." Although one of the principal methods of Angevin expansion was by the creation of family connections Geoffrey exerted his control through various methods. His father had controlled Nantes through his second marriage to the widowed countess and Geoffrey continued this by making Count Guerech accept him as overlord. With an eye towards Maine, Geoffrey took advantage of the rift that developed between the Counts of Maine and the viscounts and Bishops of Le Mans. About 971 Geoffrey secured the see of Le Mans for his ally Bishop Seinfroy. In 973 Geoffrey had married his daughter Ermengarde-Gerberga to Conan I of Rennes but Conan began to oppose Geoffrey and in 982 the two met at the first battle of Conquereuil with Geoffrey defeating Conan.

Geoffrey had influence in Aquitaine by way of his sister Adelaide-Blanche's first marriage to the powerful baron Stephen, Count of Gevaudan and Forez, after whose death the lands were ruled by Adelaide. His nephews Pons and Bertrand succeeded as counts there and his niece Adalmode married Adelbert, Count of Marche and Périgord. In 975 Geoffrey had his brother Guy appointed Count and Bishop of Le Puy. In 982 Geoffrey married his now widowed sister Adelaide-Blanche to the fifteen-year-old Louis V of France, the two being crowned King and Queen of Aquitaine. But the marriage to a woman thirty years his senior failed as did Geoffrey's plans to control Aquitaine through his young son-in-law. After the death of his first wife Adele, Geoffrey married secondly Adelaide de châlon as Queen of Aquitaine and for nearly a decade exerted control over the county of Châlons. [6] Through the marriage of his son, Fulk III, to Elisabeth the heiress of Vendôme Geoffrey brought that county into the Angevin sphere of influence. Fortunately it was at this same time Geoffrey made his son Fulk Nerra his co-ruler since he died shortly thereafter while besieging the fortress of Marcon on 21 July 987.

Stephen I, also known as King Saint Stephen c. 975 – 15 August 1038 AD), was the last Grand Prince of the Hungarians between 997 and 1000 or 1001, and the first King of Hungary from 1000 or 1001 until his death in 1038. The year of his birth is uncertain, but many details of his life suggest that he was born in or after 975 in Esztergom. At his birth, he was given the pagan name Vajk. The date of his baptism is unknown. He was the only son of Grand Prince Géza and his wife, Sarolt, who was descended from the prominent family of the gyulas. Although both of his parents were baptized, Stephen was the first member of his family to become a devout Christian. He married Gisela of Bavaria, a scion of the imperial Ottonian dynasty. After succeeding his father in 997, Stephen had to fight for the throne against his relative, Koppány, who was supported by large numbers of pagan warriors. He defeated Koppány mainly with the assistance of foreign knights, including Vecelin, Hont and Pázmány, but also with help from native lords. He was crowned on 25 December 1000 or 1 January 1001 with a crown sent by Pope Sylvester II. In a series of wars against semi-independent tribes and chieftains—including the Black Hungarians and his uncle, Gyula the Younger—he unified the Carpathian Basin. He protected the independence of his kingdom by forcing the invading troops of Conrad II, Holy Roman Emperor, to withdraw from Hungary in 1030. Stephen established at least one archbishopric, six bishoprics and three Benedictine monasteries; thus the Church in Hungary developed independently of the archbishops of the Holy Roman Empire. He encouraged the spread of Christianity with severe punishments for ignoring Christian customs. His system of local administration was based on counties organized around fortresses and administered by royal officials. Hungary, which enjoyed a lasting period of peace during his reign, became a preferred route for pilgrims and merchants traveling between Western Europe and the Holy Land or Constantinople. He survived all of his children. He died on 15 August 1038 and was buried in his new basilica, built in Székesfehérvár and dedicated to the Holy Virgin. His death caused civil wars which lasted for decades. He was canonized by Pope Gregory VII, together with his son, Emeric, and Bishop Gerard of Csanád, in 1083. Stephen is a popular saint in Hungary and the neighboring territories. In Hungary, his feast day (celebrated on 20 August) is also a public holiday commemorating the foundation of the state.

3399. GISELA OF BAVARIA (Howard Charles's thirty-one-times-great-grandmother[3386], see Maternal Ancestry(180) and Maternal Ancestry(189)) was born in 972 to Henry II of Bavaria[3446] and Gisela de Bourgogne[3447]. Gisela became known as ‘The Blessed’. She died in 1033, aged about 61.

William IV (937 – 3 February 994), called Fierebras or Fierebrace (meaning "Proud Arm", from the French Fier-à-bras or Fièbrebrace, in turn from the Latin Ferox brachium), was the Duke of Aquitaine and Count of Poitou from 963 to his retirement in 990. William's father, William III, abdicated to the abbey of Saint-Cyprien in Poitiers and left the government to Fierebras. His mother was Gerloc, the daughter of Duke Rollo of Normandy. His sister was Adelaide, wife of Hugh Capet, the king against whom William later battled for his duchy. His early reign was characterised by many wars. He fought frequently against the counts of Anjou, the first time against Geoffrey Greymantle, who had taken Loudun.

In 988, he went to war with the newly elected king of France, Hugh Capet, whom he refused to recognise. Capet renewed his claim on the great duchy and invaded it that year. A royal army was defeated on the plain of the Loire Valley. William sheltered the young Louis, the son of Charles, Duke of Lower Lorraine, the last legitimate Carolingian heir. He opened the palace of Poitiers to him and treated him as royalty, regarding him as the true heir to the French throne.

In 968, he married Emma or Emmeline, daughter of Theobald I of Blois and Luitgarde of Vermandois. Their marriage was stormy, in part because of William's indulgence in the pursuit of women and, a hunting aficionado, wild animals. She banished his paramours, they separated twice for long periods, and finally he retired to a monastery, as his father had done, leaving Emma to rule Aquitaine in the name of their son William until 1004. Their second son, Ebles, died sometime after 997.

3401. EMMA DE BLOIS (Howard Charles's thirty-one-times-great-grandmother[3388], see Maternal Ancestry(181) and Maternal Ancestry(190)) was born in 950. She died in 1003, aged about 53.

William IV de Acquitaine[3400] married Emma de Blois. They had one son:

FULK III (THE BLACK) D'ANJOU (Howard Charles's thirty-one-times-great-grandfather[3389], see Maternal Ancestry(177), Maternal Ancestry(181), Maternal Ancestry(188) and Maternal Ancestry(190)) was born on 21 June 987, in Anjou, Isere, Rhone-Alpes, France, to Geoffroy I D'Anjou[3392] and Adele de Vermandois[3393]. Fulk III (The Black) became known as ‘The Black’. The Black was a Count of Anjou. He died on 1 September 1040, aged 53, in Metz, Moselle, Lorraine, France. He was buried in chapel of his monastery at Beaulieu, France.

Fulk III, the Black (970–1040; Old French: Foulque Nerra) was an early Count of Anjou celebrated as one of the first great builders of medieval castles. He constructed an estimated 100 of them, along with abbeys, across the Loire Valley in what is now France. He fought successive wars with neighbors in Brittany, Blois, Poitou and Aquitaine and traveled four times to Jerusalem on pilgrimage during the course of his life. He had two wives and three children.

Fulk was a natural horseman and a fearsome warrior, with a keen sense of military strategy that saw him get the better of most of his opponents. He was allied with the goals and aims of the Capetians against the dissipated Carolingians of his era. With his county seat at Angers, Fulk’s bitter enemy was Eudes II of Blois, his neighbor 128 km east along the Loire River, at Tours. The two men traded towns, followers and insults throughout their lives.

Fulk finished his first castle at Langeais, 104 km east of Angers, on the banks of the Loire, in 994. Like many of his constructions, it began as a wooden tower, and was eventually replaced with a stone structure, fortified with exterior walls, and equipped with a thick-walled tower called a donjon in French (source of the English dungeon, which however implies a cellar, rather than a tower). He built it in the territory of Eudes I, Count of Blois, and they fought a battle over it in 994. But Eudes I died of a sudden illness, and his son and successor, Eudes II, did not manage to evict him.

Fulk continued building more towers in a slow encirclement of Tours: Montbazon, Montrésor, Mirebeau, Montrichard, Loches, and even the tower of Montboyau, erected just across the Loire from Tours in 1016. He also fortified the castles at Angers, Amboise, Chateau-Gontier, Chinion, Mayenne and Sémblancay, among many others. “The construction of castles for the purpose of extending a ruler’s power was part of Fulk Nerra’s strategy,” wrote Peter Fraser Purton, in A History of Medieval Siege, c. 450–1220.

Fulk was also a devout Christian, and built, enlarged or endowed several abbeys and monasteries, such as the Abbey of Beaulieu-les-Loches, Saint-Florent-le-Vieil, Saint-Aubin, and a convent, Notre Dame de la Charité at Ronceray in Angers. Although he never learned to write, he endowed a school with revenue to provide poor students with an education. Fulk also undertook four pilgrimages to Jerusalem.

3406. DIRK II (THEODORIC) VAN HOLLAND & WEST-FRIESLAND (Howard Charles's thirty-one-times-great-grandfather[3393], see Maternal Ancestry(112) and Maternal Ancestry(115)) was born in 930, in Egmond-Binnen, Noord Holland, to Dirk I (De Jongere) van Holland & West-Friesland[3454] and Gerberge de Vermandois[3455]. Dirk II (Theodoric) was a Count of Holland and West Friesland. He died on 6 May 988, aged about 57, in Abdijkerk, Egmond, Noord Holland. Citation: Source 96. Unreliable or estimated.

Dirk II or Theoderic II (920/930 – 6 May 988) was Count in Frisia (west of the Vlie) and Holland. He was the son of Count Dirk I and Geva (or Gerberge). In 983 Emperor Otto III confirmed his rights within the Duchy of Lower Lorraine to properties and territories in the counties of Maasland, Kinhem (Kennermerland) and Texla (Texel), thus stretching along the entire Hollandic coast (as well as inland). Count Dirk II built a fortress near Vlaardingen, which later was the site of a battle between his grandson Dirk III and an Imperial army under Godfrey II, Duke of Lower Lorraine.

Dirk II rebuilt Egmond Abbey and its wooden church in stone to house the relics of Saint Adalbert, the project starting in 950. Adalbert was not well known at that time, but he was said to have preached Christianity in the immediate surroundings two centuries earlier. The abbey was given to a community of Benedictine monks from Ghent, who replaced the nuns originally at Egmond Abbey, probably in the 970s. His daughter Erlint, Erlinde or Herlinde, who was abbess at the time, was made abbess of the newly founded Bennebroek Abbey instead. Dirk married Hildegard (thought to be a daughter of Count Arnulf of Flanders, based on the names of her children), and had three known children. His son Arnulf became Count of Holland and Frisia after Dirk's death. The younger son Egbert became Archbishop of Trier in 977. His daughter Erlinde (Herlinde) was abbess of Egmond Abbey, until that institution was changed by her father from a nunnery into a monastery, after which she became abbess of Bennebroek. Dirk died in 988 and was buried in the stone church at Egmond Abbey, which he had built there. Hildegard died two years later and was also buried there.

HERIBERT DE VERMANDOIS (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandfather[3398], see Maternal Ancestry[111], Maternal Ancestry[117], Maternal Ancestry[121] and Maternal Ancestry[128]) was born in 954, in Vermandois, Normandy, France, to Adalbert (The Pious) de Vermandois[3459] and Gerberga de Lorraine[3460]. Heribert was a Count of Vermandois. He died on 29 August 993, aged about 39, in Vermandois, Normandy, France. He was buried in Abbaye De Lagny, France.

3411. ERMENGARDE DE BAR-SUR-SEINE (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandmother[3399], see Maternal Ancestry[111], Maternal Ancestry[117], Maternal Ancestry[121] and Maternal Ancestry[128]) was born in 946, in Bourgogne, France. She died in 1018, aged about 72, in Vermandois, Normandy, France.

Heribert de Vermandois[3410] married Ermengarde de Bar-Sur-Seine in Vermandois, Normandy, France. They had one son:

Otho Eudes de Vermandois[3352] born in 979; died in 1045

3412. TADC O'BRIAIN (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandfather[3400], see Maternal Ancestry[111], Maternal Ancestry[118], Maternal Ancestry[123] and Maternal Ancestry[132]) was born in 973, in Munster, Clare, Ireland, to Brian Boruma Maccennetig[3461] and Echrad Ui Aeda Odba[3462]. He died in 1023, aged about 50, in Munster, Clare, Ireland.

3413. MOR INGEN MUIRCHERTAIG MUAID (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandmother[3401], see Maternal Ancestry[111], Maternal Ancestry[118], Maternal Ancestry[123] and Maternal Ancestry[132]) was born in 974, in Munster, Ireland. Mor Ingen Muirchertaig was a Queen of Munster. She died in 1018, aged about 44, in Ireland.

Tadc O'Briain[3412] married Mor Ingen Muirchertaig Muaid. They had one son:

Tairdelbach O'Briain[3358] born in 1009 in Munster, Clare, Ireland; died on 14 July 1086 in Ceanncoradh, Munster, Ierland

3414. BERENGAR II OF ITALY (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandfather[3402], see Maternal Ancestry[150], Maternal Ancestry[160], Maternal Ancestry[185], Maternal Ancestry[186], Maternal Ancestry[191] and Maternal Ancestry[216]) was born in 900. He died on 4 August 966, aged about 66.

3415. WILLA OF TUSCANY (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandmother[3403], see Maternal Ancestry[150], Maternal Ancestry[160], Maternal Ancestry[185], Maternal Ancestry[186], Maternal Ancestry[191] and Maternal Ancestry[216]) was born in 911 to Boson D'Arles[3463] and Willa de Bourgogne[3464]. She died in 970, aged about 59.

Willa, known as Willa of Tuscany (911/912-970), was a queen consort of Italy. She was the daughter of Boso, Margrave of Tuscany and his wife Willa of Burgundy. She was the wife and queen consort of Berengar II of Italy. She was the mother of Adalbert, Guy, Conrad and Rozala of Italy. She mistreated Adelaide of Italy when Berengar held her captive for several months in 951. The chronicler Liutprand of Cremona, raised at the court at Pavia, gives several particularly vivid accounts of Willa's character in Antapodosis. After Berengar's deposition, she was held captive in a German nunnery.

Berengar II of Italy[3414] married Willa of Tuscany. They had one son:

Adalbert of Italy[3360] born in 932; died in 975

3416. GISELBERT DE LORRAINE (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandfather[3404], see Maternal Ancestry[133], Maternal Ancestry[150], Maternal Ancestry[185], Maternal Ancestry[186], Maternal Ancestry[191] and Maternal Ancestry[216]) was born in 885 to Reginar I (Longneck) de Lorraine[3465] and Alberade de Mons[3466]. He died in 939, aged about 54.

3417. GERBERGA OF SAXONY (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandmother[3405], see Maternal Ancestry[133], Maternal Ancestry[150], Maternal Ancestry[185], Maternal Ancestry[186], Maternal Ancestry[191] and Maternal Ancestry[216]) was born on 14 July 913, in Nordhausen, Vogtlandkreis, Sachsen, Germany, to Henry of Saxony[3467] and Matilda Widukinde Ringelheim[3468]. She died on 5 May 984, aged 70, in Rheims, Marne, Champagne-Ardenne, France.

Giselbert de Lorraine[3416] married Gerberga of Saxony. They had two daughters:

Albérade de Lorraine[3363] born in 930 in Lorraine, France; died on 15 March 973 in Roucy, Aisne, Picardie, France
Gerberga de Lorraine[3460] born in 935 in Lorraine, France; died in 978 in Vermandois, Normandy, France

3418. WILLIAM I LONGSWORD OF NORMANDY (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandfather[3406], see Maternal Ancestry(150), Maternal Ancestry(161), Maternal Ancestry(170), Maternal Ancestry(185), Maternal Ancestry(186), Maternal Ancestry(189), Maternal Ancestry(191) and Maternal Ancestry(218)) was born in 893, in Normandy, France, to Hrold (Rollo) Ragnvaldsson[3489] and Poppa of Bayeux[3490]. William I Longsword was a Duke of Normandy. He died on 17 December 942, aged about 49, in Island Picquigny, Somme River, Normandy, France.

Longsword succeeded Rollo (who would continue to live for about another 5 years) in 927 and, early in his reign, faced a rebellion from Normans who felt he had become too Gallicised and too soft. According to Orderic Vitalis, the leader was Riouf of Evreux, who was besieging Longsword in Rouen. Sallivating forth, Longsword won a decisive battle, proving his authority to be Duke:.25-6 At the time of this 933 rebellion Longsword sent his pregnant wife by custom, Sprota, to Fécamp where their son Richard was born.

In 933 Longsword recognized Raoul as King of Western Francia, who was struggling to assert his authority in Northern France. In turn Raoul gave him lordship over much of the lands of the Bretons including Avranches, the Cotentin Peninsula and the Channel Islands. The Bretons did not agree to these changes and resistance to the Normans was led by Alan Wrybeard, Duke of Brittany and Count Berenger of Rennes but ended shortly with great slaughter and Breton castles being razed to the ground. Alan fleeing to England and Beranger seeking reconciliation.

In 935, Longsword married Luitgarde, daughter of Count Herbert II of Vermandois whose dowry gave him the lands of Longueville, Coudres and Illiers l'Eveque. Longsword also contracted a marriage between his sister Adela (Gerloc was her Norse name) and William, Count of Poitou with the approval of Hugh the Great. In addition to supporting King Raoul, he was now a loyal ally of his father-in-law, Herbert II, both of whom his father Rollo had opposed. In January 936 King Raoul died and the 16 year old Louis IV, who was living in exile in England, was persuaded by a promise of loyalty by Longsword, to return and became King. The Bretons returned to recover the lands taken by the Normans, resulting in fighting in the expanded Norman lands. The funerary monument of William Longsword in the cathedral of Rouen, France. The monument is from the 14th century.

Longsword pledged his loyalty to King Louis IV when they met in 940 and, in return, he was confirmed in lands that had been given to his father, Rollo. In 941 a peace treaty was signed between the Bretons and Normans, brokered in Rouen by King Louis IV which limited the Norman expansion into Breton lands. The following year, on 17 December 942 at Picquigny on an island on the Somme, Longsword was ambushed and killed by followers of Arnulf while at a peace conference to settle their differences. Longsword's son, Richard becoming the next Duke of Normandy.

3419. SPROTE DE BRETAGNE (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandmother[3407], see Maternal Ancestry(150), Maternal Ancestry(161), Maternal Ancestry(170), Maternal Ancestry(185), Maternal Ancestry(186), Maternal Ancestry(189), Maternal Ancestry(191) and Maternal Ancestry(218)) was born in 911, in Brittany, France. Sprota was the name of a Breton captive who William I, Duke of Normandy took as a wife in the Viking fashion (more danico) and by her had a son, Richard I, Duke of Normandy. After the death of her husband William, she became the wife of Esperleng and mother of Rodulf of Ivy. The first mention of her is by Floodoard of Reims and although he doesn't name her he identifies her under the year [943] as the mother of "William's son [Richard] born of a Breton concubine". Her Breton origins could mean she was of Celtic, Scandinavian, or Frankish origin, the latter being the most likely based on her name spelling. Elisabeth van Houts wrote "on this reference rests the identification of Sprota, William Longsword's wife 'according to the Danish custom', as of Breton origin". The first to provide her name was William of Jumièges. The irregular nature (as per the Church) of her relationship with William served as the basis for her son by him being the subject of ridicule, the French King Louis "abused the boy with bitter insults", calling him "the son of a whore who had seduced another woman's husband."

At the time of the birth of her first son Richard, she was living in her own household at Bayeux, under William's protection. William, having just quashed a rebellion at Pré-de Bataille (c. 936), received the news by a messenger that Sprota had just given birth to a son; delighted at the news William ordered his son to be baptized and given the personal name of Richard. William's steward Boto became the boy's godfather.

After the death of William Longsword and the captivity of her son Richard, she had been 'collected' from her dangerous situation by the immensely wealthy Esperleng. Robert of Torigni identified Sprota's second husband as Esperleng, a wealthy landowner who operated mills at Pîtres. By William I Longsword she was the mother of:

Richard I, Duke of Normandy
By Esperling of Vaudreuil she was the mother of:
Rodulf, Count of Ivry
several daughters who married Norman magnates.

William I Longsword of Normandy[3418] married Sprote de Bretagne. They had one son:

Richard I of Normandy[3364] born on 28 August 933 in Fécamp, Seine-Maritime, Haute-Normandie, France; died on 20 November 996 in Fécamp, Seine-Maritime, Haute-Normandie, France

3420. HERBASTUS "LE DANOIS" DE CRÉPON (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandfather[3408], see Maternal Ancestry(150), Maternal Ancestry(161), Maternal Ancestry(171), Maternal Ancestry(185), Maternal Ancestry(186), Maternal Ancestry(189), Maternal Ancestry(191) and Maternal Ancestry(218)) was born in 911, in Crépon, Calvados, Lower Normandy, France. Herbastus "Le Danois" became known as 'le Danois'. le Danois was a King of Denmark. He died in 987, aged about 76, in Hellig, Trefold Ghede Kirk, Roskilde, Denmark.

3421. GYRITHE CYRID OLAFSDOTTER (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandmother[3409], see Maternal Ancestry(150), Maternal Ancestry(161), Maternal Ancestry(171), Maternal Ancestry(185), Maternal Ancestry(186), Maternal Ancestry(189), Maternal Ancestry(191)) was born in 936, in Uppsala, Sweden, to Olaff III The Sharp Sighted & The Mighty Ericksson[3469] and Anna Ingeborg Thransdotter[3470]. Gyrithe Cyrid was a Princess of Denmark. She died on 11 November 1002, aged about 66, in Longueville, Lot-et-Garonne, Aquitaine, France.

Herbastus "Le Danois" de Crépon[3420] married Gyrithe Cyrid Olafsdotter. They had one daughter:

Gunnora of Normandy[3365] born on 21 November 936 in Rouen, Normandy, France; died on 5 January 1031 in Fécamp, Seine-Maritime, Haute-Normandie, France

3422. JUDICAEL-BERENGUER DE BAYEUX (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandfather[3416], see Maternal Ancestry(150), Maternal Ancestry(161), Maternal Ancestry(185), Maternal Ancestry(186), Maternal Ancestry(191) and Maternal Ancestry(219)) was born in 931, in Rennes, Ille-et-Vilaine, Brittany. He died in 970, aged about 39, in Rennes, Ille-et-Vilaine, Brittany.

Constantine VIII (960 – 11 November 1028) was the Byzantine Emperor from 15 December 1025 until his death in 1028. He was the younger son of Emperor Romanos II and Empress Theophano. He was nominal co-emperor for 63 years from 962, successively with his father; stepfather, Nikephoros II; uncle (by marriage), John I; and brother, Basil II. Basil II died childless in 1025 and thus left the rule of the Byzantine Empire in Constantine's hands. Constantine had no interest in politics, statecraft or the military. His brief reign is said to have been "an unmitigated disaster", sparking "a collapse of the military power of the 3425. HELENA ? (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandmother[3420], see Maternal Ancestry(162), Maternal Ancestry(164) and Maternal Ancestry(221)) was born in 975, in Constantinople, Turkey. Helena was an Empress of Byzantium. She died in 1024, aged about 49, in Constantinople, Turkey. Constantine VIII Porphyrogenita[3424] married Helena ?. They had one daughter: Zoe Porphyrogenita[3369] born in 978 in Constantinople, Turkey; died in 1050 in Constantinople, Turkey.

3426. WULFNOTH OF SUSSEX (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandfather[3421], see Maternal Ancestry(163), Maternal Ancestry(164) and Maternal Ancestry(222)) was born in 970, in Sussex, England. He died in 1015, aged about 45, in Winchester Castle, Hampshire, England.

3427. THYRA SVENSDATTER (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandmother[3422], see Maternal Ancestry(163), Maternal Ancestry(164) and Maternal Ancestry(222)) was born in 978 in Constantinople, Turkey; died in 1050 in Constantinople, Turkey.

3428. THORGILS STYRBJØRNSSON (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandfather[3423], see Maternal Ancestry(163), Maternal Ancestry(164) and Maternal Ancestry(222)) was born in 945, in Uppsala, Sweden. He died on 22 September 1027, aged about 82, in Slaget ved Svolder, Sweden.

3429. SIGRID HARALDSDATTER (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandmother[3424], see Maternal Ancestry(163), Maternal Ancestry(164) and Maternal Ancestry(222)) was born in 945, in Hålland, Jamtland, Sweden. She died on 18 September 1000, aged about 55.

3430. GODEFROI I DE ARDENNES (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandfather[3425], see Maternal Ancestry(163), Maternal Ancestry(164) and Maternal Ancestry(222)) was born in 937 to Gozelon De Bidgau de Ardennes[3471] and Oda de Metz[3472]. He died on 4 September 1005, aged about 68.

3431. MATHILDE DE SAXE (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandmother[3426], see Maternal Ancestry(163), Maternal Ancestry(164) and Maternal Ancestry(222)) was born in 937 to Gozelon De Bidgau de Ardennes[3471] and Oda de Metz[3472]. He died on 4 September 1005, aged about 68.

3432. HUGH THE GREAT CAPET (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandfather[3427], see Maternal Ancestry(184), Maternal Ancestry(186) and Maternal Ancestry(190)) was born in 898 to Robert I Capet[3473] and Béatrice de Vermandois[3474]. He was born in Paris, Île-de-France, France. His eldest son was Hugh Capet who became King of France in 987. His family is known as the Robertians. In 922 the barons of western Francia, after revolting against the Carolingian king Charles the Simple (who fled his kingdom under their onslaught), elected Robert I, Hugh's father, as King of Western Francia. At the death of Robert I, in battle at Soissons in 923, Hugh refused the crown and it went to his brother-in-law, Rudolph, of France. Charles, however, sought help in regaining his crown from his cousin Herbert II, Count of Vermandois, who instead of helping the King imprisoned him. Herbert then used his prisoner as an advantage in pressing his own ambitions, using the threat of releasing the king up until Charles' death in 929. From then on Herbert II of Vermandois struggled with king Rudolph and his vassal Hugh the Great.[4] Finally Rudolph and Herbert II came to an agreement in 935. At the death of Rudolph in 936, Hugh was in possession of nearly all of the region between the Loire and the Seine, corresponding to the ancient Neustria, with the exceptions of Anjou and of the territory ceded to the Normans in 911. He took a very active part in bringing Louis IV (d'Outremer) from the Kingdom of England in 936. In 937 Hugh married Hedwige of Saxony, a daughter of Henry the Fowler of Germany and Matilda, and soon quarrelled with Louis.

In 938 King Louis IV began attacking fortresses and lands formerly held by members of his family, some held by Herbert II of Vermandois. In 939 king Louis attacked Hugh the Great and William I, Duke of Normandy, after which a truce was concluded, lasting until June. That same year Hugh, along with Herbert II of Vermandois, Arnulf I, Count of Flanders and Duke William Longsword paid homage to the Emperor Otto the Great, and supported him in his struggle against Louis. When Louis fell into the hands of the Normans in 945, he was handed over to Hugh in exchange for their young duke Richard. Hugh released Louis IV in 946 on condition that he should surrender the fortress of Laon. In 948 at a church council at Ingelheim the bishops, all but two being from Germany, condemned and excommunicated Hugh in absentia, and returned Archbishop Artauld to his See at Reims. Hugh's response was to attack Soissons and Reims while the excommunication was repeated by a council at Trier. Hugh finally relented and made peace with Louis IV, the church and his brother-in-law Otto the Great.

On the death of Louis IV, Hugh was one of the first to recognize Lothair as his successor, and, at the intervention of Queen Gerberga, was instrumental in having him crowned. In recognition of this service Hugh was invested by the new king with the duchies of Burgundy and Aquitaine. In the same year, however, Giselbert, duke of Burgundy, acknowledged himself his vassal and betrothed his daughter to Hugh's son Otto-Henry. On 16 June 936 Hugh the Great died in Dourdan.

3433. HEDWIGE OF SAXONY (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandmother[3428], see Maternal Ancestry(184), Maternal Ancestry(186) and Maternal Ancestry(190)) was born in 910. She died on 10 May 965, aged about 54.

Hugh The Great Capet[3432] married Hedwige of Saxony. They had one son:

Hugh Capet[3380] born in 941 in Paris, France; died on 24 October 996

3434. SVIATOSLAV I OF KIEV (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandfather[3429], see Maternal Ancestry(184)) was born in 942, in Kiev, Ukraine, to Igor I of Kiev[3475] and Olga of Kiev[3476]. Sviatoslav I was a Grand Prince of Kiev. He died in 972, aged about 30, in Dnieper River cataracts, near present Khortytsia, (Present Zaporizhska Oblast), Ukraine. He was buried in Church of the Tithes, Kiev, Ukraine.

Sviatoslav I Igorevich (c. 942 – March 972), also spelled Svjatoslav was a Grand prince of Kiev famous for his persistent campaigns in the east and south, which precipitated the collapse of two great powers of Eastern Europe, Khazaria and the First Bulgarian Empire. He also conquered numerous East Slavic tribes, defeated the Alans and attacked the Volga Bulgars,[4][5] and at times was allied with the Pechenegs and Magyars.

His decade-long reign over the Kievan Rus' was marked by rapid expansion into the Volga River valley, the Pontic steppe, and the Balkans. By the end of his short life, Sviatoslav carved out for himself the largest state in Europe, eventually moving his capital in 969 from Kiev (modern-day Ukraine) to Pereyaslavets (identified as the modern village of Nufăru, Romania[6]) on the Danube. In contrast with his mother's conversion to Christianity, Sviatoslav remained a staunch pagan all of his life. Due to his abrupt death in ambush, his conquests, for the most part, were not consolidated into a functioning empire, while his failure to establish a stable succession led to a fratricidal feud among his three sons, resulting in two of them being killed.

Fearing that the peace with Sviatoslav would not endure, the Byzantine emperor induced the Pecheneg khan Kurya to kill Sviatoslav before he reached Kiev. This was in line with the policy outlined by Constantine VII Porphyrogenitus in De Administrando Imperio of fomenting strife between the Rus' and the Pechenegs. According to the Slavic chronicle, Sveneld attempted to warn Sviatoslav to avoid the Dnieper rapids, but the prince slighted his wise advice and was ambushed and slain by the Pechenegs when he tried to cross the cataracts near Khortitsa early in 972. The Primary Chronicle reports that his skull was made into a chalice by the Pecheneg khan.

Following Sviatoslav's death, tensions between his sons grew. A war broke out between his legitimate sons, Oleg and Yaropolk, in 976, at the conclusion of which Oleg was killed. In 977 Vladimir fled Novgorod to escape Oleg's fate and went to Scandinavia, where he raised an army of Varangians and returned in 980. Yaropolk was killed, and Vladimir became the sole ruler of Kievan Rus'.

3435. MALUSHA LUBECH (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandmother[3430], see Maternal Ancestry(184)) was born in 944, in Kiev, Ukraine. Malusha was a Housekeeper to Sviatoslav I. She is no longer living.

Malusha/Malfrida historically is known as a servant (kholopka) for Olga of Kiev and wife of Sviatoslav I of Kiev. According to Slavonic chronicles, she was the mother of Vladimir the Great and sister of Dobrynya. The Norse sagas describe Vladimir's mother as a prophetess who lived to the age of 100 and was brought from her cave to the palace to predict the future. Malusha monuments in Korosten, Ukraine, with her young son Vladimir.

Sviatoslav I of Kiev married Malusha Lubech. They had one son:

Vladimir The Great of Kiev born in 958 in Budyatychi, Ukraine; died on 15 July 1015 in Kiev, Ukraine.

3436. ROMANOS II OF BYZANTIUM (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandfather, see Maternal Ancestry(164) and Maternal Ancestry(184)) was born in 929 to Constantine VII of Byzantium and Helena Lekapene. Romanos II was an Emperor of Byzantium. He died in 963, aged about 34.

3437. THEOPHANO ANASTASIA KOURKOUAS (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandmother, see Maternal Ancestry(164) and Maternal Ancestry(184)) was born in 936, in Constantinople, Turkey. Theophano Anastasia was an Empress of Byzantium. She died (Fever) on 15 June 991, aged about 54, in Constantinople, Turkey.

Theophano 941 – after 978) was Byzantine Empress by marriage to Romanos II and Nikephoros II. In 963, between her first husband Romanos' death and her second marriage, she was regent for her sons Basil II and Constantine VIII. Theophano historically has been depicted as infamous. Theophano was born of Laconian Greek origin in the Peloponnesian region of Lakonia, possibly in the city of Sparta, in 941. Theophano was originally named Anastasia, or more familiarly Anastaso and was the daughter of a poor tavern-keeper called Craterus. Theophano was renowned for her great beauty and heir apparent Romanos fell in love with her around the year 956 and married her against the wishes of his father, Emperor Constantine VII. Theophano's humble origins made her unpopular among Byzantine elites and when her father-in-law Constantine VII died, rumors were spread alleging that she had poisoned him. Constantine died in 959 of a fever which lasted several months, not showing evidence of poisoning. Astute and intelligent, Theophano had influence with her husband, Romanos, an influence resented and likely exaggerated by her rivals in the court.

Theophano and Romanos II had three children:

Basil II
Constantine VIII
Anna Porphyrogenita

Theophanu, the consort of Otto II, Holy Roman Emperor, has been suggested as the fourth child of the couple. Current research holds that her actual father was Konstantinos Skleros, brother of the pretender Bardas Skleros and her mother was Sophia Phokaina, niece of Nikephoros II.

Romanos II of Byzantium married Theophano Anastasia Kourkouas. They had two children:

Constantine VIII Porphyrogenita born in 960 in Constantinople, Turkey; died on 11 November 1028 in Constantinople, Turkey
Anna Porphyrogenita born on 13 March 963; died in 1011

3438. FULK II D'ANJOU (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandfather, see Maternal Ancestry(177), Maternal Ancestry(184), Maternal Ancestry(188) and Maternal Ancestry(190)) was born in 905 to Fulk I D'Anjou and Roscille de Loches. Fulk II became known as 'The Good'. The Good was a Count of Anjou. He died in 960, aged about 55, in Tours, France.

Fulk II born c. 905 was a son of Fulk the Red and his wife Roscilla de Loches, daughter of Warnerius, Seigneur de Villentrois. He succeeded his father in 942 as the second count of Anjou, also called the count of Angers, and remained in power until 960. The Angevins, Fulk II included, had become particularly adept at establishing marriage alliances that furthered their goals. His father, Fulk the Red had arranged his marriage to a Carolingian, Gerberga, the daughter of Ratbarnus I Viscount of Vienne. Among other things this alliance opened the doors for their daughter Adelaide-Blanche to marry a future king of France and their son Guy to become Bishop of le Puy. After her death c. 952 Fulk made another astute political marriage to Adelaide, the widow of Alan II, Duke of Brittany. Alan II had also been Count of Nantes and through this marriage Fulk gained influence in, and possibly control of, Nantes.[7] Adelaide was also the sister of Theobald I, Count of Blois which permitted Fulk II to form an alliance with the House of Blois.

3439. GERBERGE DU MAINE-GATINAIS (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandmother[3434], see Maternal Ancestry(177), Maternal Ancestry(184), Maternal Ancestry(188) and Maternal Ancestry(190)) was born in 905, in Maine, Charente, Poitou-Charentes, France. Gerberge was a Countess d'Anjou. She died in 952, aged about 47, in Tours, Puy-De-Dome, Auvergne, France.

Fulk II D'Anjou[3438] married Gerberge du Maine-Gatinais. They had two children:

- Geoffroy I D'Anjou[3392] born on 11 November 940 in Anjou, France; died in 962 in Marçon, France
- Adelaide de Arles[3383] born in 945; died in 1026

3440. ROBERT 'DE CAROLUS' DE VERMANDOIS (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandfather[3435], see Maternal Ancestry(177), Maternal Ancestry(188) and Maternal Ancestry(190)) was born in 910, in Meaux, Seine-et-Marne, Ile-de-France, France, to Héribert II de Vermandois[3481] and Adelaide Liégarde of France[3482]. Robert 'De Carolus' was a Count of Meaux. He died on 29 August 968, aged about 58, in Champagne, Dordogne, Aquitaine, France.

Robert of Vermandois (c. 907 – c. 967/8) was Count of Meaux, succeeding his father, Herbert II, Count of Vermandois and his wife, Adele (Liégarde) of France.
He was married to Adelais (914–967) of Burgundy, daughter of Giselbert, Duke of Burgundy.
They had two children:
- Herbert III, Count of Meaux (c. 935 – 995)
- Adele of Meaux (c. 935 – c. 982).

3441. ADÉLAÏDE-WERRA DE VERMANDOIS (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandmother[3436], see Maternal Ancestry(177), Maternal Ancestry(188) and Maternal Ancestry(190)) was born in 915, in Auxerre, Yonne, Bourgogne, France, Auxerre, Bourgogne, France, to Giselbert de Bourgogne[3483] and Ermengarde de Bourgogne[3484]. She died on 19 August 967, aged about 52, in Vermandois, Normandy, France.

Robert 'De Carolus' de Vermandois[3440], aged about 40, married Adélaïde-Werra de Vermandois, aged about 35, in 950. They had one daughter:

- Adele de Vermandois[3393] born in 945 in Vermandois, Normandy, France; died in 976 in Anjou, Isere, Rhone-Alpes, France

3442. DUNCAN MACDONACHADH MORMAER ATHOLL (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandfather[3438], see Maternal Ancestry(180) and Maternal Ancestry(189)) was born in 949, in Atholl, Perthshire, Scotland, to Duncan I of Dule[3485] and Halvdan Sigurdsdottir[3486]. He died in 1010, aged about 61, in Mortlach, Banffshire, Scotland.

3443. ATHELREDA DUNBAR (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandmother[3439], see Maternal Ancestry(180) and Maternal Ancestry(189)) was born in 951, in Atholl, Perthshire, Scotland. She died in Dunfermline, Fife, Scotland.

Duncan Macdonachadh Mormaer Atholl[3442], aged about 28, married Athelreda Dunbar, aged about 26, in 977 in Perth, Perthshire, Scotland. They had one son:

- Crinan Grimus "The Hound" of Mormaer of Atholl[3396] born in 978 in Atholl, Perthshire, Scotland; died on 4 December 1045 in Dunkeld, Perthshire, Scotland

3444. GÉZA OF HUNGARY (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandfather[3440], see Maternal Ancestry(180) and Maternal Ancestry(189)) was born in 940. Géza was a Grand Prince of the Hungarians. He died in 997, aged about 57.

Géza (c. 940 – 997), also Gejza, was Grand Prince of the Hungarians from the early 970s. He was the son of Grand Prince Taksony and his Oriental—Khazar, Pecheneg or Volga Bulgarian—wife. He married Sarolt, a daughter of an Orthodox Hungarian chieftain. After ascending the throne, Géza made peace with the Holy Roman Empire. Within Hungary, he consolidated his authority with extreme cruelty, according to the unanimous narration of nearly contemporaneous sources. He was the first Hungarian monarch to support Christian missionaries from Western Europe. Although he was baptised (his baptismal name was Stephen), his Christian faith remained shallow and continued to perform acts of pagan worship. He was succeeded by his son, Stephen who was crowned the first King of Hungary in 1000 or 1001.

3445. SAROLT OF TRANSYLVANIA (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandmother[3441], see Maternal Ancestry(180) and Maternal Ancestry(189)) was born in 950. She died in 1008, aged about 58.

Sarolt (c. 950 – c. 1008) was wife of Géza, Grand Prince of the Hungarians. She was a daughter of Gyula of Transylvania and was probably educated in the Eastern Orthodox faith. She was married to Géza, the son of Taksony, Grand Prince of the Hungarians, who succeeded his father before 972. Sarolt exerted a powerful influence on her husband which allowed her to also influence his government. She was watched with suspicion by Catholic missionaries. The chronicles accused her of drinking insatiably and even committing manslaughter. After her husband's death in 997, one of his distant cousins Koppány, who declared his claim to the leadership of the Magyars against her son, Stephen (Vajk), wanted to marry Sarolt, referring to the Hungarian tradition. Koppány, nevertheless, was defeated, and shortly afterward Sarolt's son was crowned as the first King of Hungary.

Her name (Šar-oldu) is of Turkic origin and means "white weasel".[4] She was also called "Beleknegini" by her Slavic subjects, which means "white queen".[5].

Géza of Hungary[3444] married Sarolt of Transylvania. They had one son:
Stephen I of Hungary[3398] born in 975 in Hungary; died on 15 August 1038

3446. HENRY II OF BAVARIA (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandfather[3442], see Maternal Ancestry(180) and Maternal Ancestry(189)) was born in 951. Henry II was a Duke of Bavaria. He died in 995, aged about 44.

Henry II (951 – 28 August 995), called the Wrangler or the Quarrelsome (German: Heinrich der Zänker), a member of the German royal Ottonian dynasty, was Duke of Bavaria from 955 to 976 and again from 985 to 995, as well as Duke of Carinthia from 989 to 995.

3447. GISELA DE BOURGOGNE (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandmother[3443], see Maternal Ancestry(180) and Maternal Ancestry(189)) was born in 950. Gisela was a Duchess of Bavaria. She died in 1006, aged about 56.

Gisela of Burgundy (died 21 July 1006) was the daughter of Conrad the Peaceful, King of Burgundy and Adelaide of Bellay, Conrad's first wife. Gisela was a niece of the empress Adelaide. She married Henry the Quarrelsome, Duke of Bavaria some time before 972. With Henry she had three children:
Henry IV of Bavaria (973/78–1024),[1] succeeded his father as Duke of Bavaria in 995, fulfilled his father's ambitions when he was elected King of the Romans (as Henry II) in 1002 and crowned Holy Roman Emperor in 1014
Bruno (d. 1029), Bishop of Augsburg from 1006
Gisela of Bavaria (984/85–1060), married King Stephen I of Hungary.

Henry II of Bavaria[3446] married Gisela de Bourgogne. They had one daughter:
Gisela of Bavaria[3399] born in 972; died in 1033

3448. WILLIAM III (TOWHEAD) DE ACQUITAINE (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandfather[3444], see Maternal Ancestry(181), Maternal Ancestry(184) and Maternal Ancestry(190)) was born in 915 to Ebalus Manzer de Acquitaine[3487] and Emilienne de Poitou[3488]. He died on 3 April 963, aged about 47.

Citation: Source 96. Unreliable or estimated.
William III (915 – 3 April 963), called Towhead (French: Tête d'étoupe, Latin: Caput Stupe) from the colour of his hair, was the "Count of the Duchy of Aquitaine" from 939 and Duke of Aquitaine from 962 to his death. He was also the Count of Poitou (as William I) from 935 and Count of Auvergne from 950. The primary sources for his reign are Ademar of Chabannes, Dudo of Saint-Quentin, and William of Jumièges. William was son of Ebalus Manzer and Emilienne. He was born in Poitiers. He claimed the Duchy of Aquitaine from his father's death, but the royal chancery did not recognise his ducal title until the year before his own death.

Shortly after the death of King Rudolph in 936, he was constrained to forfeit some land to Hugh the Great by Louis IV. He did it with grace, but his relationship with Hugh thenceforward deteriorated. In 950, Hugh was reconciled with Louis and granted the duchies of Burgundy and Aquitaine. He tried to conquer Aquitaine with Louis's assistance, but William defeated them. Lothair, Louis's successor, feared the power of William. In August 955 he joined Hugh to besiege Poitiers, which resisted successfully. William, however, gave battle and was routed.

After the death of Hugh, his son Hugh Capet was named duke of Aquitaine, but he never tried to take up his fief, as William reconciled with Lothair. He was given the abbey of Saint-Hilaire-le-Grand, which remained in his house after his death. He also built a library in the palace of Poitiers.

3449. ADELA GERLOC OF NORMANDY (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandmother[3445], see Maternal Ancestry(181), Maternal Ancestry(184) and Maternal Ancestry(190)) was born in 920 to Hrold (Rollo) Ragnvaldsson[3489] and Poppa of Bayeux[3490]. She died in 962, aged about 42.

William III (Towhead) de Acquitaine[3448] married Adela Gerloc of Normandy. They had two children: William IV de Acquitaine[3400] born in 937 in Aquitaine, France; died in 995 and Adelaide Aquitaine[3381] born in 952 in Germany; died on 15 June 1004 in Paris, France

3450. THIERRY I DE LORRAINE (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandfather[3446], see Maternal Ancestry(177), Maternal Ancestry(181), Maternal Ancestry(188) and Maternal Ancestry(190)) was born in 965 to Frédéric I de Lorraine[3491] and Beatrice de France[3492]. Thierry I was a Duke of Lorraine. He died in 1027, aged about 62.

Thierry I, born about 965, died between April 11, 1026 and January 2, 1027, was a count of Bar and Duke of Upper Lotharingie (or Lorraine). He was son of Frederick I, Count of Bar and Duke of Haute-Lotharingie and Beatrice de France, sister of Hugh Capet. He succeeded his father in 978 and his mother took over the regency until 987. In 985, with other lords Lorraine (among others his cousin Godefroy the Captive, Count of Verdun), he fought against King Lothaire of France who was besieging Verdun, but he was taken prisoner. He was an unconditional supporter of the Ottoman emperors and fought for Henry II against his cousins in Luxembourg in 1011. He was captured again in 1018 while fighting in Burgundy, but defeated Eudes II de Blois, count of Troyes and Meaux. In 1019, he associated his son Frederick II with the government of the duchy. On the death of Emperor Henry II (1024), he fought Conrad II, then changed his alliance and the recognized emperor.

3451. RICHILDE DE LUNÉVILLE DE METZ (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandmother[3447], see Maternal Ancestry(177), Maternal Ancestry(181), Maternal Ancestry(188) and Maternal Ancestry(190)) was born in 965, in Luneville, Lorraine, France. She died in 995, aged about 30, in Lothringen, Germany.

Thierry I de Lorraine[3450] married Richilde de Lunéville de Metz. They had one daughter: Hildegarde de Lorraine[3403] born in 985 in Anjou, Isere, Rhone-Alpes, France; died on 1 April 1046 in Jerusalem, Holy Land 3452. KONRAD I VAN SCHWABEN (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandfather[3448], see Maternal Ancestry(150) and Maternal Ancestry(175)) was born in 920 to Odo van Wetterau Konradijn[3493] and Cunigonda de Vermandois[3494]. He died on 20 August 997, aged about 77.

Konrad I (also Konrad) (born 915/920 - died August 20, 997) was Duke of Swabia from 983 until 997. His appointment as duke marked the return of Conradine rule over Swabia for the first time since 948. There is considerable confusion about Conrad and his family. He is often identified with Cuno of Öhningen. His wife was Judith, daughter of Adalbert of Marchtal.

When Duke Otto I unexpectedly died during the Imperial campaign in Italy of 981-982, he left no heirs. To fill the vacancy, Emperor Otto II (who may have been Conrad's brother-in-law) appointed Conrad as Duke of Swabia. Conrad is notable for being the first Swabian duke to keep the title in the family; after his death in 997 he was succeeded by his son Hermann II.

3453. JUDITH VAN MARCHTAL (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandmother[3449], see Maternal Ancestry(150) and Maternal Ancestry(175)) was born in 937. She died in 992, aged about 55.

Konrad I van Schwaben[3452] married Judith van Marchtal. They had one daughter: Judith van Schwaben[3405] born in 969 in Luxembourg; died in 1038 in Bouzoneville, Loiret, Centre, France

3454. DIRK I (DE JONGERE) VAN HOLLAND & WEST-FRIESLAND (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandfather[3450], see Maternal Ancestry(112) and Maternal Ancestry(115)) was born in 916, in Noordwijk Binnen, Zuid Holland, to Gerulf II van Friesland[3495] and Mathilde van Beiren[3496]. Dirk I (De Jongere) was a Count of Frisia and West Holland. He died (Battle at Breisach) in 939, aged about 23, in Egmond, The Netherlands. He was buried in Egmond Abbey, Egmond-Binnen, Bergen (NH).

Dirk I (Frisian Durk I or Diderik, Latin Theoderic or Thidericus Fresonie, German Dietrich) was Count of Holland, thought to have been in office from c. 896 to c. 928 or 939. The actual title of count Dirk I was 'count in Frisia'. Dirk is thought to be a son of Gerulf II, the preceding 'count in Frisia', who is named by some sources as one of the counts who assassinated their Viking overlord Godfrid 'the Sea King' at a place named Herespeich (modern Spijk) in 885. Regarding Dirk I, almost nothing is known of his life, a situation further clouded by the present-day hypothesis that he had a son, Dirk (numbered Dirk I bis, to avoid confusion with the already established numbering), who succeeded him instead of the traditional view that he was succeeded by his supposed son Dirk II.

In 922 Dirk was present at a place called Bladella (present day Bladel, in the extreme south of the Dutch province of Noord Brabant), at which he received certain lands ('at a place called Egmond') from the West Frankish king Charles the Simple. Dirk subsequently erected a nunnery at the said lands, at which nuns prayed continuously for the well-being of the comital dynasty. This was the origin of the later Egmond Abbey.

Under Dirk II the wooden convent was rebuilt in stone to house the relics of Saint Adalbert. Adalbert was not well known at that time, but he was said to have preached Christianity in the immediate surroundings two centuries earlier. The monastery was also changed to house a community of Benedictine monks from Ghent, replacing the nuns. Count Dirk and many of his descendants were buried in the abbey church.

3455. GERBERGE DE VERMANDOIS (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandmother[3451], see Maternal Ancestry(112) and Maternal Ancestry(115)) was born in 880, in Vermandois, Normandy, France, to Pepin III of Senlis And Bretagne[3497] and Cunigunde de Rennes[3498]. Gerberge was a Countess of Frisia. She died in 965, aged about 85, in Bohain-en-Vermandois, Aisne, Picardy, France. She was buried in Egmond, The Netherlands.

Dirk I (De Jongere) van Holland & West-Friesland[3454] married Gerberge de Vermandois. They had one son:

Dirk II (Theodoric) van Holland & West-Friesland[3406] born in 930 in Egmond-Binnen, Noord Holland; died on 6 May 988 in Abdijkerk, Egmond, Noord Holland

3456. ARNULF I OF FLANDERS (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandfather[3452], see Maternal Ancestry(112) and Maternal Ancestry(115)) was born in 890 to Baldwin The Bald of Flanders[3499] and Ælfthryth Daughter of Alfred The Great[3500]. Arnulf I was a Count of Flanders. He died on 28 March 965, aged about 74.

Citation: Source 96. Unreliable or estimated.

Arnulf of Flanders (c. 890 – March 28, 965), called the Great, was the first Count of Flanders, who ruled the County of Flanders, an area that is now northern France (Nord), northwestern Belgium and southwestern Netherlands.

Arnulf was the son of margrave Baldwin II of Flanders and Ælfthryth of Wessex, daughter of Alfred the Great. Through his mother he was a descendant of the Anglo-Saxon kings of England, and through his father, a descendant of Charlemagne. Presumably Arnulf was named after Saint Arnulf of Metz, a progenitor of the Carolingian dynasty.

At the death of their father in 918, Arnulf became Count of Flanders while his brother Adelorf or Adelolf succeeded to the County of Boulogne. However, in 933 Adeloff died, and Arnulf took the countship of Boulogne for himself, but later conveyed it to his nephew, Arnulf II. Arnulf I greatly expanded Flemish rule to the south, taking all or part of Artois, Ponthieu, Amiens, and Ostrevent. He exploited the conflicts between Charles the Simple and Robert I of France, and later those between Louis IV and his barons. In his southern expansion Arnulf inevitably had conflict with the Normans, who were trying to secure their northern frontier. This led to the 942 murder of the Duke of Normandy, William Longsword, at the hands of Arnulf's men. The Viking threat was receding during the later years of Arnulf's life, and he turned his attentions to the reform of the Flemish government. The name of Arnulf's first wife is unknown but he had at least one daughter by her:

Direct Relations

Cambrai. In 934 he married Adele of Vermandois, daughter of Herbert II of Vermandois. Their children were:

Hildegarde, born c. 934, died 990; she married Dirk II, Count of Holland. It is uncertain whether she is his daughter by his first or second wife.

Liutgard, born in 935, died in 962; married Wichmann IV, Count of Hamaland.

Egbert, died 953.

Baldwin III of Flanders (c. 940 – 962), married Mathilde of Saxony († 1008), daughter of Hermann Billung.

Elftrude; married Siegfried, Count of Guînes.

Arnulf made his eldest son and heir Baldwin III of Flanders co-ruler in 958, but Baldwin died untimely in 962, so Arnulf was succeeded by Baldwin's infant son, Arnulf II of Flanders.

3457. ADELE DE VERMANDOIS (Howard Charles's thirty-two-times-great-grandmother[3453], see Maternal Ancestry(112) and Maternal Ancestry(115)) was born in 910 to Herbert I de Vermandois[3501] and Bertha of Morvois[3502]. Adele was a Countess of Flanders. She died in 960, aged about 50.

Arnulf I of Flanders[3456] married Adele de Vermandois. They had one daughter:

Hildegard van Vlaanderen[3407] born in 935; died in 990

3458. EADGIFU OF WESSEX (Howard Charles's cousin, thirty-four times removed[3593]) was born in 902 to Edward The Elder of Wessex[3503] and Ælfflaed of Wiltshire[3504]. She died in 955, aged about 53.

Citation: Source 96. Unreliable or estimated.

Eadgifu was one of three West Saxon sisters married to Continental rulers: the others were Eadgyth, who married Otto I, Holy Roman Emperor and Eadhild, who married Hugh the Great. Eadgifu became the second wife of King Charles III of France, whom she married in 919 after the death of his first wife, Frederonne. Eadgifu was mother to Louis IV of France. In 922 Charles III was deposed and, after being defeated at the Battle of Soissons in 923, he was taken prisoner by Count Herbert II of Vermandois, an ally of the then current king. To protect her son's safety Eadgifu took him to England in 923 to the court of her half-brother, King Æthelstan of England. Because of this, Louis IV of France became known as Louis d'Outremer of France. He stayed there until 936, when he was called back to France to be crowned King. Eadgifu accompanied him. She retired to a convent in Laon. In 951, Heribert the Old, Count of Omois, abducted and married her, to the great anger of her son.

Eadgifu married her indirect relation, Charles III (The Simple) Carolingian[3555].

Saint Matilda (c. 894/97 – 14 March 968) was Duchess of Saxony from 912 and German queen (Queen of the Franks) from 919 by her marriage with Henry the Fowler, the first king of the Ottonian dynasty. Upon her husband's death in 936, she founded Quedlinburg Abbey to commemorate the late king. Matilda lived to see Western Imperial rule restored when her eldest son Otto was crowned Holy Roman Emperor in 962. Her surname refers to Ringelheim, where her comital Immedinger relatives established a nunnery about 940.

Medieval chroniclers like Liutprand of Cremona and Thietmar of Merseburg celebrated Matilda for her devotion to prayer and almsgiving. Her first biographer depicted her (in a passage attributed to the sixth-century vita of the Frankish queen Radegund by Venantius Fortunatus) leaving her husband's side in the middle of the night and sneaking off to church to pray. St. Matilda founded many religious institutions, including the monastery of Quedlinburg, which became a center of ecclesiastical and secular life in Germany under the rule of the Ottonian dynasty. She also founded the convents of St. Wigbert in Quedlinburg, in Pöhlde, Enger, and Nordhausen, likely the source of at least one of her vitae. She was later canonized, with her cult largely confined to Saxony and Bavaria. St. Matilda's feast day according to the regional German calendar of saints is 14 March. In 1836–58 the Neo-Gothic St. Matilda's Church was erected in Quedlinburg, according to plans designed by the Austrian architect Friedrich Schmidt. Another St. Matilda's Church was consecrated in Laatzen, Lower Saxony in 1938. The Melkite Greek Catholic community of Aleppo built a church dedicated to Saint Matilda in 1964. There is a stained glass window dedicated to Saint Matilda in the parish church (built 1838–41) of Coole, Ireland.

Henry of Saxony[3467], aged about 62, married Matilda Widukinde Ringelheim, aged 60, on 14 September 938 in Mainz Oder, Ingelheim, Rheinland, Germany. They had one daughter:

Robert I of France (866 – June 15, 923) was the elected King of West Francia from 922 to 923. Before his election to the throne he was Count of Poitiers, Count of Paris and Marquis of Neustria and Orléans. He succeeded the overthrown Carolingian king Charles the Simple, who in 898 had succeeded Robert's brother, king Odo. In 885 Robert participated in the defence of Paris during the Viking siege of Paris. He was appointed by Odo as the ruler of several counties, including the county of Paris, and abbot in commendam of many abbeys. Robert also secured the office of Dux Francorum, a military dignity of high importance. He did not claim the crown of West Francia when his brother died in 898; instead recognizing the supremacy of the Carolingian king, Charles the Simple. Charles then confirmed Robert in his offices and possessions, after which he continued to defend northern Francia from the attacks of Vikings. Robert defeated a large band of Vikings in the Loire Valley in 921, after which the defeated invaders converted to Christianity and settled near Nantes. The peace between the king Charles the Simple and his powerful vassal was not seriously disturbed until about 921 when Charles' favoritism towards Hagano aroused rebellion. Supported by many of the clergy and by some of the most powerful of the Frankish nobles, Robert took up arms, drove Charles into Lorraine, and was himself crowned king of the Franks (rex Francorum) at Rheims on 29 June 922. Robert's rule was contested by the Viking leader Rollo, who had settled in Duchy of Normandy in 911 with the permission of Charles the Simple. During Robert's reign, Rollo remained loyal to Charles, who continued to contest his deposition.[5] Gathering an army, Charles marched against Robert, and on 15 June 923 in a battle near Soissons Robert was killed. However, his army won the battle and Charles was captured. Charles remained a captive until his death in 929. Robert was succeeded as king by his son-in-law Rudolph, Count of Burgundy, also known as Raoul.

3474. BÉATRICE DE VERMANDOIS (Howard Charles's thirty-three-times-great-grandmother[3472], see Maternal Ancestry(228), Maternal Ancestry(243) and Maternal Ancestry(254)) was born in 880, in Vermandois, Normandy, France, to Herbert I de Vermandois[3501] and Bertha of Morvois[3502]. She died on 26 March 931, aged about 50, in Soissons, Aisne, Picardie, France.

Robert I Capet[3473] married Béatrice de Vermandois. They had one son:

Hugh The Great Capet[3432] born in 898; died on 16 June 956 in Dourdan

3475. IGOR I OF KIEV (Howard Charles's thirty-three-times-great-grandfather[3473], see Maternal Ancestry(232)) was born in 878, in Novgorod, Russia, to Rurik of Kiev[3521] and Edvina Alfrind Ingrid van Urman[3522]. Igor I was a King of Kiev. He died in 945, aged about 67, in Iskorosten, Ukraine.

Information about Igor comes mostly from the Primary Chronicle. This document has Igor as the son of Rurik, the first ruler of Kievian Rus'. (870–879). On his deathbed, Rurik bequeathed his realm to Oleg, who belonged to his kin, and entrusted to Oleg's hands his son Igor', for he was very young. Oleg set forth, taking with him many warriors from among the Varangians, the Chuds, the Slavs, the Merians and all the Krivichians. He thus arrived with his Krivichians before Smolensk, captured the city, and set up a garrison there. Thence he went on and captured Lyubech, where he also set up a garrison. He then came to the hills of Kiev, and saw how Askold and Dir reigned there. He hid his warriors in the boats, left some others behind, and went forward himself bearing the child Igor'. He thus came to the foot of the Hungarian hill, and after concealing his troops, he sent messengers to Askold and Dir, representing himself as a stranger on his way to Greece on an errand for Oleg and for Igor', the prince's son, and requesting that they should come forth to greet them as members of their race. Askold and Dir straightway came forth. Then all the soldiery jumped out of the boats, and Oleg said to Askold and Dir, "You are not princes nor even of princely stock, but I am of princely birth." Igor' was then brought forward, and Oleg announced that he was the son of Rurik. They killed Askold and Dir, and after carrying them to the hill, they buried them there, on the hill now known as Hungarian, where the castle of Ol'ma now stands. Igor' twice besieged Constantinople, in 941 and 944, and although Greek fire destroyed part of his fleet, he concluded with the Eastern Roman Emperor Constantine VII a favourable treaty (945), the text of which the chronicle has preserved. In 913 and 944 the Rus' plundered the Arabs in the Caspian Sea during the Caspian expeditions of the Rus’, but it remains unclear whether Igor' had anything to do with these campaigns.
Olga of Kiev (Howard Charles’s thirty-three-times-great-grandmother[3474], see Maternal Ancestry(232)) was born in 890, in Pskov, Rusland, Russia. Olga was a Saint and Queen of Kiev. She died on 11 July 969, aged about 79, in Kiev, Ukraine.

Saint Olga (Old Church Slavonic: Ольга, born c. 890 AD, died 11 July 969 in Kiev) was a ruler of Kievan Rus’ as regent (945 – c. 960) for her son, Svyatoslav. She is known for her obliteration of the Drevlians, a tribe that had killed her husband Igor of Kiev, and for her efforts to spread Christianity through the Rus’; however, it would be her grandson Vladimir that would convert the entire nation to Christianity. Because of this, Olga is venerated as a saint. While her birthdate is unknown, it could be as early as AD 890 and as late as 5 June 925.

Olga was the first ruler of Rus’ to convert to Christianity, in either 945 or 957. The ceremonies of her formal reception in Constantinople were minutely described by Emperor Constantine VII in his book De Ceremoniis. Following her baptism, Olga took the Christian name Yelena, after the reigning Empress Helena Lekapena. The Slavonic chronicles add apocryphal details to the account of her baptism, such as the story of how she charmed and "outwitted" Constantine and spurned his proposals of marriage. In actuality, at the time of her baptism, Olga was an old woman, while Constantine already had a wife.

Olga was one of the first people of Rus’ to be canonized, proclaimed a saint for her efforts to spread Christianity throughout the country. Because of her proselytizing influence, the Orthodox Church, Byzantine Catholic Church, and the Ukrainian Greek Catholic Church call Saint Olga by the honorific Isapóstolos, "Equal to the Apostles". However, she failed to convert Svyatoslav, and it was left to her grandson and pupil, Vladimir I, to make Christianity the lasting state religion. During her son’s prolonged military campaigns, she remained in charge of Kiev, residing in the castle of Vyshgorod together with her grandsons. She died soon after the Pechenegs’ siege of the city, in 969.

She was born in 890 AD. She married Prince Igor, the son of the founder of the Rurik Dynasty of Russia. When her husband was killed, she had control of the throne since her son was only three years old at the time. The Drevlians (they were the people who killed her husband) did not like a her being ruler, they sent ambassadors to her to try to convince her to marry a man that they liked. When they arrived, she buried them alive. She sent a message back to them telling them to send her better suitors. They did, and she locked them in a bathhouse and burned them alive. She then killed many of the men from the tribe when she visited them at a feast. They did, and she locked them in a bathhouse and burned them alive. She then killed many of the men from the tribe when she visited them at a feast. And when one specific Drevlyan city refused to pay their taxes, she ordered them to give her pigeons and sparrows (they thought they would be forgiven in doing so). She had ordered every bird to be attached to a sting loosely to carry sulfur, which rained down on the city, setting it complete on fire. She also ordered her soldiers to kill anyone who ran out of the city to try to escape and she made the survivors into slaves. Despite all of this, she became a saint to the Catholics. I would say she was pretty savage.

Constantine VII Porphyrogennetos or Porphyrogenitus, "the Purple-born" (that is, born in the purple marble slab-paneled imperial bed chambers; Greek: Κωνσταντῖνος Ζ΄ Πορφυρογέννητος, Konstantinos Z’ Porphyrogennitos; 17–18 May 905 – 9 November 959), was the fourth Emperor of the Macedonian dynasty of the Byzantine Empire, reigning from 913 to 959. He was the son of the emperor Leo VI and his fourth wife, Zoe Karbonopsina, and the nephew of his predecessor, the emperor Alexander.
Most of his reign was dominated by co-regents: from 913 until 919 he was under the regency of his mother, while from 920 until 945 he shared the throne with Romanos Lekapenos, whose daughter Helena he married, and his sons.
His nickname alludes to the Purple Room of the imperial palace, decorated with porphyry, where legitimate children of reigning emperors were normally born. Constantine was also born in this room, although his mother Zoe had not been married to Leo at that time.
Nevertheless, the epithet allowed him to underline his position as the legitimized son, as opposed to all others who claimed the throne during his lifetime. Sons born to a reigning Emperor held precedence in the Eastern Roman line of succession over elder sons not born “in the purple”. Constantine was born at Constantinople, an illegitimate son born before an uncanonical fourth marriage. To help legitimize him, his mother gave birth to him in the Purple Room of the imperial palace, hence his nickname Porphyrogennetos. He was symbolically elevated to the throne as a two-year-old child by his father and uncle on May 15, 908. Constantine had active diplomatic relationships with foreign courts, including those of the caliph of Cordoba Abd ar-Rahman III and of Otto I, Holy Roman Emperor. In the autumn of 957 Constantine was visited by Olga of Kiev, regent of the Kievan Rus'. The reasons for this voyage have never been clarified; but she was baptised a Christian with the name Helena, and sought Christian missionaries to encourage her people to adopt Christianity. According to legends, Constantine VII fell in love with Olga, however she found the way to refuse him by tricking him to become her godfather. When she was baptized, she said it was inappropriate for a godfather to marry his goddaughter. Constantine VII died at Constantinople in November 959 and was succeeded by his son Romanos II. It was rumored that Constantine had been poisoned by his son or his daughter-in-law Theophano.

3478. HELENA LEKAPENE (Howard Charles’s thirty-three-times-great-grandmother[3476], see Maternal Ancestry(233)) was born in 910 to Romanos I Lekapene[3525] and Theodora Lekapene[3526]. Helena was an Empress of Byzantium. She died on 19 September 961, aged about 51. Citation: Source 96. Unreliable or estimated.

The deaths of Emperor Leo VI the Wise in 912 and his brother and successor Alexander in 913, left the throne of the Byzantine Empire to Constantine VII. Constantine was only seven years old when he assumed the throne. The Empire was placed in the care of regents. Nicholas Mystikos, Patriarch of Constantinople was the principal regent until March 914. He was displaced by Zoe Karbonopsina, mother of the young emperor. Zoe reigned with the support of influential general Leo Phocas until 919. However, Leo led the Byzantine army into a series of lost battles against Simeon I of Bulgaria in one campaign of the Byzantine-Bulgarian Wars. This strengthened the opposition to the Regent and her favorite general. In 919, a coup d'état involving various factions managed to remove Zoe from power. The new effective regent was Romanos Lekapenos, Drungarios (admiral) of the Byzantine navy. Romanos orchestrated the marriage of Helena to Constantine VII as a way to secure a connection to the legitimate Macedonian dynasty.

Constantine VII of Byzantium[3477] married Helena Lekapene. They had one son:

Romanos II of Byzantium[3436] born in 929; died in 963

Gilbert of Chalon or Giselbert (died April 8, 956) was count of Chalon, Autun, Troyes, Avallon and Dijon, and duke of Burgundy between 952 and 956. He ruled Burgundy jure uxoris, his wife Ermengarde being of the family of Richard the Justiciar. By her he had two daughters: Adelais and Liutgarde. Gilbert never managed to maintain the independence of the duchy in the struggles for power of 10th century France. In 955, he became a vassal of Hugh the Great, count of Paris and married his oldest daughter, Liutgard, to Hugh's son Otto of Paris.

Ebalus or Ebles Manzer or Manser (c. 870 – 935) was Count of Poitou and Duke of Aquitaine on two occasions: from 890 to 892; and then from 902 until his death in 935 (Poitou) and from 928 until 932 (Aquitaine). Ebles was an illegitimate son of Ranulf II of Aquitaine. "Manzer" or "Manser" is a Hebrew word that means bastard, son of a forbidden relationship, although in the case of Ebles it may have been applied to bastardy in general. Upon the death of his father (who was poisoned), Ebles assumed his father’s mantle and acquired the role of Count of Poitou. But Ebles could not hold on to the title for long. Aymar, a descendant of one of Rannulf II’s predecessors, challenged Ebles right to rule, as Ebles was merely a bastard son. In 892, Aymar, who was supported by Eudes of France, overthrew Ebles, and Ebles fled to the safety of his father’s allies, Count Gerald of Aurillac and William the Pious, count of Avergne and Duke of Aquitaine. William the Pious had taken Ebles under his care and assured the boy’s education after the death of Ebles’ father. Ebles' first wife was Aremburga, whom he married before 10 Oct 892.[2] His second wife was Emilienne, whom he married in 911. Following Emilienne’s death in 913/915, Ebles remarried to an Adele. Some 19th century English historians identified Adele with Ælfgifu, daughter of Edward the Elder, known to have married "a prince near the Alps", but there is nothing to support this identification. She has also been called Adela, Alaine, or Aliana.

Ebalus had one child by Emilienne, and another one by Adele:
William III of Aquitaine married Gerloc, daughter of Rollo of Normandy
Ebalus, Bishop of Limoges and Treasurer of St. Hilary of Poitiers.

Poppa of Bayeux was the Christian wife or mistress (perhaps more danico) of the Viking conqueror Rollo. She was the mother of William I Longsword and grandmother of Richard the Fearless, who forged the Duchy of Normandy into a great fief of medieval France. Dudo of Saint-Quentin, in his panegyric of the Norman dukes, describes her as the daughter of a "Count Berengar", the dominant prince of that region, who was captured at Bayeux by Rollo in 885 or 889.[4] This has led to speculation that she was the daughter of Berengar II of Neustria. Despite the uncertainty of her parentage, she undoubtedly was a member of the Frankish aristocracy. A statue of Poppa stands at the Place de Gaulle in Bayeux.

Hrold (Rollo) Ragnvaldsson[3489] married Poppa of Bayeux. They had two children:

Frederick I (c. 912 – 18 May 978) was the count of Bar and duke of Upper Lorraine. He was a son of Wigeric, count of Bidgau, also count palatine of Lorraine, and Cunigunda, and thus a sixth generation descendent of Charlemagne.
In 954, he married Beatrice, daughter of Hugh the Great, count of Paris, and Hedwige of Saxony. He received in dowry the revenues of the abbey of Saint-Denis in Lorraine. To stop incursions from the duchy of Champagne, Frederick constructed a castle over the Ornain river in 960, and later occupied confiscated lands of Saint-Mihiel. He exchanged fiefs with the bishop of Toul. Thus, he created his own feudal domain, the county of Bar. So he became the founder of the House of Bar or the House of Ardennes-Bar, a cadet branch of the House of Ardennes.
The duchy of Lorraine was at that time governed by the archbishop of Cologne, Bruno, who was called the archduke on account of his dual title. In 959, Bruno, in concert with his brother, the Emperor Otto I, divided the duchy, appointing as margraves (or vice-dukes) one Godfrey in Lower Lorraine and Frederick in Upper Lorraine. After Bruno's death, in 977, Frederick and Godfrey were styling themselves dukes. As duke, Frederick oversaw the reform of Saint-Dié and Moyenmoutier.
His children were:
Henry (died between 972 and 978)
Adalbero II (958–1005), bishop of Verdun and Metz
Thierry I (965–1026), count of Bar and duke of Upper Lorraine
Ida (970-1026), married in 1010 Radbot, Count of Habsburg (970-1027), who built the castle of Habichtsburg and is thus an ancestor of the great Habsburg family which dominated Europe in the sixteenth century.

3492. BEATRICE DE FRANCE (Howard Charles's thirty-three-times-great-grandmother[3490], see Maternal Ancestry(177), Maternal Ancestry(181), Maternal Ancestry(190) and Maternal Ancestry(247)) was born in 938. She died in 988, aged about 50.

Frédéric I de Lorraine[3491] married Beatrice de France. They had one son:
Thierry I de Lorraine[3450] born in 965; died in 1027

3493. ODO VAN WETTERAU KONRADIJN (Howard Charles's thirty-three-times-great-grandfather[3491], see Maternal Ancestry(150) and Maternal Ancestry(175)) was born in 882, in Wetterau, Schwaben, Bayern, Germany, to Gebhard van Lotheringen[3544] and Ida van Ezzo[3545]. He died on 12 December 949, aged about 67, in Wetterau, Schwaben, Bayern, Germany.

3494. CUNIGONDA DE VERMANDOIS (Howard Charles's thirty-three-times-great-grandmother[3492], see Maternal Ancestry(150) and Maternal Ancestry(175)) was born in 895. She died on 22 December 949, aged about 54.

Odo van Wetterau Konradijn[3493] married Cunigonda de Vermandois. They had one son:
Konrad I van Schwaben[3452] born in 920; died on 20 August 997

3495. GERULF II VAN FRIESLAND (Howard Charles's thirty-three-times-great-grandfather[3493], see Maternal Ancestry(135) and Maternal Ancestry(151)) was born in 850, in Noordwijk Binnen Nederland, to Gerulf I van Friesland[3546]. Gerulf II was a Count of Friesia. He died in 896, aged about 46, in Corvey Duitsland.

Gerolf or Gerulf (c. 850 – 895/896) was the second count of this name who is attested in the area of Friesland (which also included Holland at the time). Gerolf's main area of power seems to have been in Kennemerland. Count Gerolf is often regarded as the founder of the County of Holland, although the actual name "Holland" is from a later time. His ancestry is unclear, but he may have been a son or, more likely, a grandson of the earlier Gerolf, who was a count in the area of Frisia at the time of the reign of Emperor Louis I the Pious (fl. 833) and who later joined a monastery. The earlier Gerolf died in 855. There is some limited and vague evidence that this earlier Gerolf was a son of a certain Theodoric, who in turn supposedly descended from the Frisian king Redbad (d. 719). Count Gerolf is often identified as the father of Count Dirk I and seen as the founder of the first house of the Counts of Holland, which ruled the county until it was inherited by John II of Hainaut in 1299.

3496. MATHILDE VAN BEIREN (Howard Charles's thirty-three-times-great-grandmother[3494], see Maternal Ancestry(177), Maternal Ancestry(181), Maternal Ancestry(190) and Maternal Ancestry(247)) was born in 913 to Wigéric Ricuinus de Treves[3542] and Cunégonde de Gand[3543]. He died in 978, aged about 65.
Ancestry(135) and Maternal Ancestry(151)) was born in 825. Mathilde was a Countess of Friesland. She is no longer living.

Gerulf II van Friesland[3495] married Mathilde van Beiren. They had one son:

Dirk I (De Jongere) van Holland & West-Friesland[3454] born in 916 in Noordwijk Binnen, Zuid Holland; died in 939 in Egmond, The Netherlands

3497. PEPIN III OF SENLIS AND BRETAGNE (Howard Charles's thirty-three-times-great-grandfather[3495], see Maternal Ancestry(136) and Maternal Ancestry(152)) was born in 846, in Vermandois, Normandy, France, to Pépin II de Péronne[3553] and Rothaïde de Bobbio[3554]. Pepin III was a Count of Bayeux and de Rennesame. He died in 893, aged about 47, in Normandy, France.

3498. CUNIGUNDE DE RENNES (Howard Charles's thirty-three-times-great-grandmother[3496], see Maternal Ancestry(136) and Maternal Ancestry(152)) was born in 852, in Rennes, Ille-et-Vilaine, Bretagne, France, to Gurwand de Rennes[3547] and Jehanne de Vannes de Bretagne[3548]. She died on 28 August 928, aged about 76, in Bayeaux, France.

Pepin III of Senlis And Bretagne[3497] married Cunigunde de Rennes. They had one daughter:

Gerberge de Vermandois[3455] born in 880 in Vermandois, Normandy, France; died in 965 in Bohain-en-Vermandois, Aisne, Picardy, France

3499. BALDWIN THE BALD OF FLANDERS (Howard Charles's thirty-three-times-great-grandfather[3497], see Maternal Ancestry(137) and Maternal Ancestry(153)) was born in 865, in Flanders, Belgium, to Baldwin I, The Iron Hand of Flanders[3549] and Judith Carolingian[3550]. He died on 10 September 918, aged about 53, in Blandijnberg, Ghent, Oost-Vlaanderen, Belgium.

Baldwin II (c. 865 – 10 September 918) was the second margrave (or count) of Flanders, ruling from 879 to 918. He was nicknamed the Bald (Calvus) after his maternal grandfather, King Charles the Bald. The early years of Baldwin's rule were marked by a series of devastating Viking raids into Flanders. By 883 CE, he was forced to move north to Pagus Flandransis, which became the territory most closely associated with the Counts of Flanders. Baldwin constructed a series of wooden fortifications at Saint-Omer, Bruges, Ghent, and Kortrijk. He then seized lands that were abandoned by royal and ecclesiastical officials. Many of these same citadels later formed castellanies which housed government, militia, and local courts. Baldwin continued his expansion to the south and gained control over Artois, including the important Abbey of St. Vaast.

When the Abbey came under the jurisdiction of Archbishop Fulk of Reims in 900 CE, Baldwin had the archbishop assassinated. When his attempts to expand further into the upper Somme River valley were opposed by Herbert I, Count of Vermandois, Baldwin had the count assassinated as well. Baldwin died on 10 September 918 CE, at Blandijnberg (near Ghent) and was succeeded by his eldest son. Arnulf I of Flanders. His younger son, Adalulf, became the first Count of Boulogne.

3500. ÆLFTHRYTH DAUGHTER OF ALFRED THE GREAT (Howard Charles's thirty-three-times-great-grandmother[3498], see Maternal Ancestry(137) and Maternal Ancestry(153)) was born in 877, in Wessex, England, to Alfred The Great of Wessex[3551] and Ealhswith of The Gaini[3552]. Ælfthryth was a Countess of Flanders. She died on 7 June 929, aged about 51, in Ubbanford, Scotland.

Ælfthryth of Wessex (877 – 7 June 929), also known as Edfriudis (Eldrude, Elfrida), was an English princess and a countess consort of Flanders. She was the youngest child of Alfred the Great, the Saxon King of England and his wife Ealhswith. Her siblings included King Edward the Elder and Æthelflæd. Between 893 and 899, Ælfthryth married Baldwin II (died 918), Count of Flanders.
Baldwin The Bald of Flanders[3499] married Ælfthryth Daughter of Alfred The Great. They had one son: Arnulf I of Flanders[3456] born in 890; died on 28 March 965

3501. HERBERT I DE VERMANDOIS (Howard Charles's thirty-three-times-great-grandfather[3499], see Maternal Ancestry(138), Maternal Ancestry(154) and Maternal Ancestry(228)) was born in 848, in Vermandois, Neustria, France or Senlis, Oise, Picardy, France, to Pépin II de Péronne[3553] and Rothaïde de Bobbio[3554]. Herbert I was a Count Of Senlis, & Vermandoises. He died in 943, aged about 95.

Herbert was the son of Pepin of Vermandois. Herbert became count of Soissons before 889 and was probably charged with defending the Oise against Viking invasions. A contemporary of Baldwin II, Count of Flanders he had the advantage of being a Carolingian, a great-grandson of Pepin of Italy, a son of Charlemagne. Herbert controlled both St. Quentin and Péronne and his activities in the upper Somme river valley, such as the capture and murder (rather than ransom) of his brother Raoul in 896, may have caused Baldwin II to have him assassinated in 907. Herbert arranged a marriage alliance to Robert of Neustria by giving in marriage his daughter Beatrice as Robert's second wife. As a part of this pact Herbert also agreed to his son Herbert II of Vermandois marrying Adela, Robert's daughter by his first wife. He married Bertha de Morvis and their children are:

Herbert II, Count of Vermandois, succeeded his father.

Béatrice of Vermandois (c. 880–931), married King Robert I of France.

Canegonda of Vermandois († aft. 943) who married Eudo, Count in the Wetterau.

3502. BERTHA OF MORVOIS (Howard Charles's thirty-three-times-great-grandmother[3500], see Maternal Ancestry(138), Maternal Ancestry(154) and Maternal Ancestry(228)) was born on 30 August 854, in Bohain-en-Vermandois, aisne, Picardie, France. She died on 15 June 923, aged 68, in Bohain-En-Vermandois, Aisne, Picardie, France.

Adele de Vermandois[3457] born in 910; died in 960

3503. EDWARD THE ELDER OF WESSEX (Howard Charles's thirty-three-times-great-great-uncle[3547]) was born in 874, in Wantage, Oxfordshire, Wessex, England, to Alfred The Great of Wessex[3551] and Ealhswith of The Gaini[3552]. Edward The Elder was a King of Wessex and England. He died on 17 July 924, aged about 50, in Farndon, Cheshire, England. He was buried in New Minster, Winchester, later translated to Hyde Abbey.

Edward the Elder (c. 874 – 17 July 924) was King of the Anglo-Saxons from 899 until his death. He was the elder son of Alfred the Great and his wife Ealhswith. When Edward succeeded to the throne, he had to defeat a challenge from his cousin Æthelwold, who had a strong claim to the throne as the son of Alfred's elder brother and predecessor, Æthelred. Alfred had succeeded Æthelred as king of Wessex in 871, and almost faced defeat against the Danish Vikings until his decisive victory at the Battle of Edington in 878. After the battle, the Vikings still ruled Northumbria, East Anglia and eastern Mercia, leaving only Wessex and western Mercia under Anglo-Saxon control. In the early 880s Æthelred, Lord of the Mercians, the ruler of western Mercia, accepted Alfred's lordship and married his daughter Ælfwynn, briefly became second Lady of the Mercians, but in December Edward took her into Wessex and imposed direct rule on Mercia. By the end of the 910s he ruled Wessex, Mercia and East Anglia, and only Northumbria remained under Viking rule. In 924 he faced a Mercian and Welsh revolt at Chester, and after putting it down he died at Farndon in Cheshire on 17 July 924. He was succeeded by his eldest son Æthelstan.

Edward was admired by medieval chroniclers, and in the view of William of Malmesbury, he was "much inferior to his father in the cultivation of letters" but "incomparably more glorious in the power of his rule". He was largely ignored by modern historians until the 1990s, and Nick Higham described him as "perhaps the most neglected of English kings", partly because few primary sources for his reign survive. His reputation rose in the late twentieth century and he is now seen as destroying the power of the Vikings in southern England while laying the foundations for a south-centred united English kingdom.

3504. ÆLFFLAED OF WILTSHEIRE (Howard Charles's thirty-three-times-great-great-aunt by marriage[3592]) was born in 878, in Wiltshire, England. She died in 920, aged about 42, in Wessex, England. She was buried in Winchester Cathedral, England.

Edward The Elder of Wessex[3503], aged about 26, married Ælfflaed of Wiltshire, aged about 22, in 900 in Wessex, England. They had one daughter:

Eadgifu of Wessex[3458] born in 902; died in 955

3505. CAROLUS DE COURCY (Howard Charles's cousin, thirty-five times removed[3624]) was born on 10 September 920, in Courcy, Ardennes, Champagne, France, to Charles III (The Simple) Carolingian[3555] and Eadgifu of Wessex[3458]. Carolus was a Lord of Bar-sur-Aube. He died on 12 May 993, aged 72, in Courcy, Ardennes, Champagne, France.

3506. ARCHARDA DE BAR-SUR-AUBE (Howard Charles's cousin's wife, thirty-five times removed[3660]) was born in 905, in Laferté-sur-Aube, Haute-Marne, Champagne-Ardenne, France. Archarda was a Lady of Bar-sur-Aube. She died in 971, aged about 66, in Moselle, Lorraine, France.

Carolus de Courcy[3505] married Archarda de Bar-Sur-Aube. They had one son:

Wiger de Courcy born in 952 in Normandie, France

Rudolph I, born 859, died October 25, 912, King of (Upper or Transjurane) Burgundy from his election in 888 until his death. Rudolph belonged to the elder Welf family and was the son of Conrad, Count of Auterre, from whom he inherited the lay abbacy of St Maurice en Valais, making him the most powerful magnate in Upper Burgundy - present-day western Switzerland and the Franche Comté. After the deposition and death of Charles the Fat, the nobles and leading clergy of Upper Burgundy met at St Maurice and elected Rudolph as king. Apparently on the basis of this election, Rudolph claimed the whole of Lotharingia, taking much of modern Lorraine and Alsace - but his claim was contested by Arnulf of Carinthia, the new king of East Francia or Germany, who rapidly forced Rudolph to abandon Lotharingia in return for recognition as king of Burgundy. However, hostilities between Rudolph and Arnulf seem to have continued intermittently until 894. Rudolph's relationships with his other neighbours were friendlier. His sister Adelaide married Richard the Justiciar, duke of Burgundy (the present day Burgundy, part of west Francia), and his daughters, another Adelaide, married Louis the Blind of Provence (Lower Burgundy), and Willa, married Boso of Tuscany. Rudolph was succeeded as king of Burgundy by his son, Rudolph II. Rudolf I's widow, queen Guilla, married in 912 Hugh of Arles.

She died in 924, aged about 51, in Rome, Italy.

Guilla of Provence or of Burgundy (died before 924) was an early medieval Frankish queen in the Rhone valley. It is certain that she was firstly consort of king Rudolf I of Upper Burgundy (who was proclaimed king in 888 and died on 25 October 911) and then since 912 consort of Hugh of Arles, border count of Provence, who in 926 became king of Northern Italy. Guilla's mother were Ermengarde of Italy, one of the heiresses of last Carolingians, who was daughter of Emperor Louis II, king of Italy, and became the last of the wives of king Bosso of Lower Burgundy. This however is fairly unlikely, as Ermengarde's marriage with king Bosso took place in 978, a date when Guilla was likely already born. Guilla were the only wife of king Rudolf I of Upper Burgundy. This is not certain, as she possibly was yet in age of being capable of child-bearing at her marriage in 912 with the count Hugh, the future Italian king; and her first husband, the king Rudolf I, is mentioned of having several children already in 888 (who thus could have been born of an earlier, to us unknown, wife of Rudolf).

Queen Guilla's date of death, after 912 but before 924, is between those years because of a charter (expressing her be dead) dated in the latter year. After her death, in 926, her widower, count Hugh, took over the kingdom of Italy from Rudolf II of Burgundy (who was either stepson or own son of Guilla).

Rudolph I de Bourgogne[3509] married Willa D'Autun. They had one daughter:

Björn (traditionally ruled 882–932[1]) was the father of Olof (II) Björnsson and Eric the Victorious, and he was the grandfather of Styrbjörn the Strong, according to the Hervarar saga and Harald Fairhair's saga. According to the two sagas, he was the son of an Erik who fought Harald Fairhair and who succeeded the brothers Björn at Hauge and Anund Upsala:

King Onund had a son called Eric, and he succeeded to the throne at Upsala after his father. He was a rich King. In his days Harold the Fair-haired made himself King of Norway. He was the first to unite the whole of that country under his sway. Eric at Upsala had a son called Björn, who came to the throne after his father and ruled for a long time. The sons of Björn, Eric the Victorious, and Olaf succeeded to the kingdom after their father. Olaf was the father of Styrbjörn the Strong.(Hervarar saga)

The latter saga relates that he ruled for 30 years:

There were disturbances also up in Gautland as long as King Eirik Eymundson lived; but he died when King Harald Harfager had been ten years king of all Norway. After Eirik, his son Bjorn was king of

Genealogy
Svíþjód for fifty years. He was father of Eirik the Victorious, and of Olaf the father of Styrbjörn. (Harald Fairhair’s saga)

In Olaf the Holy’s saga, Snorri Sturluson quotes Thorgny Lawspeaker on king Björn:
My father, again, was a long time with King Björn, and was well acquainted with his ways and manners. In Björn's lifetime his kingdom stood in great power, and no kind of want was felt, and he was gay and sociable with his friends. (Saga of Olaf Haraldsson)

When Björn died, Olof and Eric were elected to be co-rulers of Sweden. However, Eric would disinherit his nephew Styrbjörn.

Adam of Bremen, however, only gives Emund Eriksson as the predecessor of Eric the Victorious, around 970.[5] Since the Swedes seem to have had a system of co-rulership (Diarchy), it is possible that Emund Eriksson was a co-ruler of Björn Eriksson. If this is the case, several generations of Swedish rulers have been conflated by late tradition, and Björn’s traditional years 882-932 are fictitious.

His name, Björn, means bear in Swedish.

Robert the Strong (c. 830 – 2 July 866), also known as Rutpert, also known as Robert IV of Worms, was Margrave in Neustria. His family is named after him and called the Robertians. In 853 he was named missus dominicus by Charles the Bald, King of West Francia. He was the father of two kings of West Francia Odo (or Eudes) and Robert I of France. Robert the Strong was the great-grandfather of Hugh Capet and thus the ancestor of all the Capetians.

On 2 July 866, Robert was killed at the Battle of Brissarthe while defending Francia against a joint Breton-Viking raiding party led by Salomon, King of Brittany and the Viking chieftain Hastein. During the battle the Viking commander was entrapped in a nearby church. Robert removed his armour to start to besiege the church; the Vikings then launched a surprise attack and Robert died in the subsequent melee. He was only a young man of 36 years old. He left behind a little son, Odo, then seven years old, as his heir. His heroic successes against the Vikings led to his characterization as "a second Maccabaeus" in the Annales Fuldenses.

3520. ADÉLAÏS DE TOURS (Howard Charles's thirty-four-times-great-grandmother[3514], see Maternal Ancestry(192), Maternal Ancestry(211), Maternal Ancestry(216), Maternal Ancestry(228), Maternal Ancestry(234), Maternal Ancestry(239), Maternal Ancestry(243), Maternal Ancestry(254) and Maternal Ancestry(259)) was born in 819, in Tours, Indre-et-Loire, Centre-Val de Loire, France, to Hugh de Tours[3568] and Ava de Morvois[3569]. She died in 882, aged about 63, in Tours.

Adélaïs married twice. She was married to Robert VI (The Strong) of Worms[3519] and Conrad (The Elder) Comte de Paris de Bourgogne, D'Auxerre, Graf von Linz Und Argengau[3601] (her indirect relation).

Robert VI (The Strong) of Worms[3519] married Adélaïs de Tours. They had one son:
Robert I Capet[3473] born in 866; died on 15 June 923

3521. RURIK OF KIEV (Howard Charles's thirty-four-times-great-grandfather[3515], see Maternal Ancestry(232)) was born in 830, in Novgorod, Russia. He died in 879, aged about 49, in Novgorod, Russia.

Citation: Source 96. Unreliable or estimated.

Rurik (c. 830 – 879), according to the 12th-century Primary Chronicle, was a Varangian chieftain of the Rus' who in the year 862 gained control of Ladoga, and built the Holmgard settlement near Novgorod. He is the founder of the Rurik Dynasty, which ruled the Kievan Rus' and its successor states, including the Grand Duchy of Moscow and the Tsardom of Russia, until the 17th century.

The only information about Rurik is contained in the 12th-century Primary Chronicle written by one Nestor, which states that Chuds, Eastern Slavs, Merians, Veses, and Krivichs "...drove the Varangians back beyond the sea, refused to pay them tribute, and set out to govern themselves". Afterwards, the tribes started fighting each other and decided to invite the Varangians, led by Rurik, to reestablish order. Rurik came in 860–862 along with his brothers Sineus and Truvor and a large retinue. According to the Primary Chronicle, Rurik was one of the Rus’, a Varangian tribe likened by the chronicler to Danes, Swedes, Angles, and Gotlanders. Sineus established himself at Beloozero (now Belozersk), on the shores of lake Beloye, and Truvor at Izborsk (or at Pskov). Truvor and Sineus died shortly after the establishment of their territories, and Rurik consolidated these lands into his own territory. According to the entries in the Radzivil and Hypatian Chronicles under the years 862–864, Rurik’s first residence was in Ladoga. He later moved his seat of power to Novgorod, a fort built not far from the source of the Volkhov River. The meaning of this place name in medieval Russian is ‘new fortification’, while the current meaning (‘new city’) developed later.

Rurik remained in power until his death in 879. On his deathbed, Rurik bequeathed his realm to Oleg, who belonged to his kin, and entrusted to Oleg’s hands his son Igor, for he was very young. His successors (the Rurik Dynasty) moved the capital to Kiev and founded the state of Kievan Rus’, which persisted until the Mongol invasion in 1240. A number of extant princely families are patrilineally descended from Rurik, although the last Rurikid to rule Russia, Vasily IV, died in 1612.

In the 20th century, archaeologists partly corroborated the chronicle’s version of events. It was discovered that the settlement of Ladoga, whose foundation has been ascribed to Rurik, was actually established in the mid-9th century, although doubt is now cast on this by the dendrochronological evidence that Ladoga existed by the mid-8th century. Earthware, household utensils, and types of buildings from the period of Rurik’s purported foundation correspond to patterns then prevalent in Jutland, but mostly the excavations denied most of the chronicle’s data about Rurik’s arrival when it was apparent that the old settlement stretched to the mid-8th century and the excavated objects were mostly of Finno-Ugric and Slavic origin, dated to the mid-5th century, which showed the settlement was not Scandinavian from the beginning.

3522. EDVINA ALFRIND INGRID VAN URMAN (Howard Charles's thirty-four-times-great-grandmother[3516], see Maternal Ancestry(232)) was born in 850, in Novgorod, Russia. She died in 930, aged about 80, in Kiev, Ukraine. Rurik of Kiev[3521] married Edvina Alfrind Ingrid van Urman. They had one son:

Igor I of Kiev[3475] born in 878 in Novgorod, Russia; died in 945 in Iskorosten, Ukraine

3523. LEO VI (THE WISE) OF BYZANTIUM (Howard Charles's thirty-four-times-great-grandfather[3517], see Maternal Ancestry(233)) was born on 19 September 866, in Constantinople, to Basil I of Byzantium[3570] and Eudoxia Ingerina[3571]. Leo VI (The Wise) was an Emperor of Byzantium. He died on 11 May 912, aged 45, in Constantinople. Citation: Source 96. Unreliable or estimated.

Leo VI, called the Wise or the Philosopher, 19 September 866 – 11 May 912), was Byzantine Emperor from 886 to 912. The second ruler of the Macedonian dynasty (although his parentage is unclear), he was very well-read, leading to his epithet. During his reign, the renaissance of letters, begun by his predecessor Basil I, continued; but the Empire also saw several military defeats in the Balkans against Bulgaria and against the Arabs in Sicily and the Aegean. His reign also witnessed the formal discontinuation of several ancient Roman institutions, such as the Roman consul and Senate (in this period also known as the Byzantine Senate), which continued to exist in name only and lost much of their original functions and powers. The future Constantine VII was the illegitimate son born before Leo’s uncanonical fourth marriage to Zoe Karbonopsina.[36] To strengthen his son’s position as heir, Leo had him crowned as co-emperor on May 15, 908, when he was only two years old. Leo VI died on May 11, 912. He was succeeded by his younger brother Alexander, who had reigned as Emperor alongside his father and brother since 879.

3524. ZOE ZAOUTZAINA (Howard Charles's thirty-four-times-great-grandmother[3518], see Maternal Ancestry(233)). Zoe was an Empress of Byzantium. She died in 899 in Convent of St. Euphemia. Citation: Source 96. Unreliable or estimated.

Zoe Karbonopsina, i.e., "with the Coal-Black Eyes", was an empress consort and regent of the Byzantine empire. She was the fourth wife of the Byzantine Emperor Leo VI the Wise and the mother of Constantine VII. Zoe Karbonopsina was a relative of the chronicler Theophanes the Confessor and a niece of the admiral Himerios. Desperate to sire a son, Leo VI married his mistress Zoe on 9 January 906, only after she had given birth to the future Constantine VII at the end of 905. However, this constituted his fourth marriage, and was therefore un-canonical in the eyes of the Eastern Orthodox Church, which had already been reluctant to accept his third marriage to Eudokia Baïana, who died in childbirth in 901. Although the Patriarch Nicholas Mystikos reluctantly baptized Constantine, he forbade the emperor from marrying for the fourth time. Leo VI married Zoe with the assistance of a cooperative priest, Thomas, but Nicholas' continued opposition to the marriage led to his removal from office and replacement by Euthymios in 907. The new patriarch attempted a compromise by defrocking the offending priest but recognizing the marriage. In 919, there was a coup involving various factions, but the opposition to Zoe and Leo Phokas prevailed; in the end the admiral Romanos Lekapenos took power, married his daughter Helena Lekapene to Constantine VII, and forced Zoe back into the convent of St. Euphemia.

Leo VI (The Wise) of Byzantium[3523] married Zoe Zaoutzaina. They had one son:

Constantine VII of Byzantium[3477] born on 18 May 905 in Constantinople; died on 9 November 959 in Constantinople

3525. ROMANOS I LEKAPENE (Howard Charles's thirty-four-times-great-grandfather[3519], see Maternal Ancestry(233)) was born in 870, in Lakape, Armenia. Romanos I was an Emperor of Byzantium. He died on 15 June 948, aged about 77, in Isle of Prote, Macedonia. He was buried in Bodrum, Turkey.

Citation: Source 96. Unreliable or estimated.

Romanos Lekapenos, born in Lakape between Melitene and Samosata (hence the name), was the son of an Armenian peasant with the remarkable name of Theophylact the Unbearable (Theophylaktos Abastaktos). Theophylact, as a soldier, had rescued the Emperor Basil I from the enemy in battle at Tephrike and had been rewarded by a place in the Imperial Guard. Although he did not receive any refined education (for which he was later abused by his son-in-law Constantine VII), Romanos advanced through the ranks of the army during the reign of Emperor Leo VI the Wise. In 911 he was general of the naval theme of Samos and later served as admiral of the fleet (droungarios tou ploimou). In this capacity he was supposed to participate in the Byzantine operations against Bulgaria on the Danube in 917, but he was unable to carry out his mission. In the aftermath of the disastrous Byzantine defeat at the Battle of Acheloos in 917 by the Bulgarians, Romanos sailed to Constantinople, where he gradually overcame the discredited regency of Empress Zoe Karvounopsina and her supporter Leo Phokas. Romanos' later reign was marked by the old emperor's heightened interest in divine judgment and his increasing sense of guilt for his role in the usurpation of the throne from Constantine VII. On the death of Christopher, by far his most competent son, in 931, Romanos did not advance his younger sons in precedence over Constantine VII. Fearing that Romanos would allow Constantine VII to succeed him instead of them, his younger sons Stephen and Constantine arrested their father in December 944, carried him off to the Prince's Islands and compelled him to become a monk. When they threatened the position of Constantine VII, however, the people of Constantinople revolted, and Stephen and Constantine were likewise stripped of their imperial rank and sent into exile to their father. Romanos died in June 948, and was buried as the other members of his family in the church of Myrelaion.

Having lived long under constant threat of deposition -or worse- by the Lekapenoi family, Constantine VII was extremely resentful of them. In his De Administrando Imperio manual written for his son and successor, Romanus II, he minces no words about his late father-in-law: "the lord Romanus the Emperor was an idiot and an illiterate man, neither bred in the high imperial manner, nor following Roman custom from the beginning, nor of imperial or noble descent, and therefore the more rude and authoritarian in doing most things ... for his beliefs were uncouth, obstinate, ignorant of what is good, and unwilling to adhere to what is right and proper."

3526. THEODORA LEKAPENE (Howard Charles's thirty-four-times-great-grandmother[3520], see Maternal Ancestry(233)). Theodora was an Empress of Byzantium. She died on 20 February 922.

Her origins and background are not known. She became the mother-in-law to Constantine VII in May or June, 919 with the marriage of the young Emperor to her daughter Helena Lekapene. Her husband Romanos was originally the Droungarios of the Fleet, before rising to become the de facto regent of the Empire after the marriage, when he was proclaimed basileopatōr. In September, 920, Romanos was invested as kaisar (Caesar). On 17 December 920, Romanos was crowned co-emperor and in effect became the senior of the two associate emperors. Theodora was crowned as Augusta in January 921. She remained in the position until her death a year later.

Romanos I Lekapene[3525] married Theodora Lekapene. They had one daughter:

Helena Lekapene[3478] born in 910; died on 19 September 961 3527. INGELGERIUS D’ANJOU (Howard Charles's thirty-four-times-great-grandfather[3521], see Maternal Ancestry(177), Maternal Ancestry(231), Maternal Ancestry(244) and Maternal Ancestry(255)) was born in 845, in Anjou, Normandie, France, to Tertullus De Gâtinais D’Anjou[3572] and Petronelle De Gâtinais D’Auxerre[3573]. Ingelgerius was a Count of Anjou. He died in 888, aged about 43, in Saint Martin, Tours, Indre-et-Loire, France.

Ingelger or Ingelgarius (died 888) was a Frankish nobleman, who was the founder of the County of Anjou and of the original House of Anjou. Later generations of his family believed he was the son of Tertullus (Tertulle) and Petronilla. Around 877 he inherited his father Tertullus’s lands in accordance with the Capitulary of Quierzy which Charles the Bald had issued. His father’s holdings from the king included Château-Landon in beneficium, and he was a casatus in the Gâtinais and Francia. Contemporary records refer to Ingelger as a miles optimus, a great military man. Later family tradition makes his mother a relative of Hugh the Abbot, an influential counselor of both Louis II and Louis III of France, from whom he received preferment. By Louis II Ingelger was appointed viscount of Orléans, which city was under the rule of its bishops at the time. At Orléans Ingelger made a matrimonial alliance with one of the leading families of Neustria, the lords of Amboise. He married Adelais, whose maternal uncles were Adalard, Archbishop of Tours, and Raino, Bishop of Angers. Later Ingelger was appointed prefect (military commander) at Tours, then ruled by Adalard.

At some point Ingelger was appointed Count of Anjou, at a time when the county stretched only as far west as the Mayenne River. Later sources credit his appointment to his defence of the region from Vikings,[4] but modern scholars have been more likely to see it as a result of his wife's influential relatives.[2] He was buried in the church of Saint-Martin at Châteauneuf-sur-Sarthe. He was succeeded by his son Fulk the Red.[4]

His wife was Adelais.[5] Her good connections may have helped her husband gain the title of Count of Anjou.[6].

3528. ADELAIDE DE GASTINOIS (Howard Charles's thirty-four-times-great-grandmother[3522], see Maternal Ancestry(177), Maternal Ancestry(231), Maternal Ancestry(244) and Maternal Ancestry(255)) was born in 844, in Tours, France. She died in Anjou, Normandie, France.

Adelais of Amboise (sometimes called Aelinde) (fl. 865), came from an influential Frankish family in the Loire Valley. Through her mother, whose name is unknown, she was the niece of Adalard, Archbishop of Tours, and Raino, Bishop of Angers. In 865, her uncles arranged a marriage for her to a Frankish man named Ingelger, described as a miles optimus, whose devotion to Charles the Bald had been rewarded with land and military commands. Adelais’ dowry included Buzençais, Châtillon-sur-Indre, and the fortress of Amboise, which ultimately grew to be the royal residence known as the Château d’Amboise. Adelais and Ingelger, who has been identified as either a viscount or the first count of Anjou, were the parents of Fulk the Red, who became the first hereditary count of Anjou. According to the Gesta Consulum Andegavorum, “after the death of her husband, Adelais was unjustly accused of adultery by a group of nobles led by ‘Guntrannus parens Ingelgerii’ but later exonerated.” Geoffrey of Anjou, founder of England’s Plantagenet dynasty, traced his ancestry to Adelas and Ingelger.

Ingelgerius D’Anjou[3527] married Adelaide de Gastinois. They had one son:

Fulk I D’Anjou[3479] born in 870 in Tours, France; died in 942 in Anjou, Normandie, France

3529. HÉRIBERT I DE VERMANDOIS (Howard Charles's thirty-four-times-great-grandfather[3523], see Maternal Ancestry(177), Maternal Ancestry(245) and Maternal Ancestry(256)) was born in 850 to Pépin II de Péronne[3553] and Rothaïde de Bobbio[3554]. Héribert I was a Count of Vermandois, Count of Meaux, and Count of Soissons. He died in 900, aged about 50.
3530. BERTHA VON MORVOIS (Howard Charles's thirty-four-times-great-grandmother[3524], see Maternal Ancestry(177), Maternal Ancestry(245) and Maternal Ancestry(256)) was born in 855. She died in 900, aged about 45.

Born around 875, Manasseh was the son of Theodoric of Vergy, the son of Warin I of Auvergne. On the side of Duke Richard the Justiciar he fought the Vikings ravaging the Burgundy. He participated in the battles of Saint-Florentin and Argenteuil against the Normans in 898. At the end of his life he founded the monastery of Saint-Vivant in Vergy Curiel-Vergy on the advice of his brother Hervé, also called "Hervé de Chalon," Bishop of Autun of 920 to 929. Here he sheltered the monks of Biarne fleeing Normans Astings (or Austin or Hastings) who, about 886, after the siege of Paris, were advancing towards Burgundy. He died around 910 / 918. Together with his wife Ermengarde (873-921 v) daughter of Boson V he was buried in his monastery.

3532. ERMENENARDE DE PROVENCE (Howard Charles's thirty-four-times-great-grandmother[3526], see Maternal Ancestry(177), Maternal Ancestry(246) and Maternal Ancestry(257)) was born in 876, in Châlons-en-Champagne, Champagne-Ardenne, France, to Boson V de Bourgogne[3574] and Ermengarde Adelaide D'Italie[3575]. She died on 12 April 935, aged about 58, in Reulle Vergy, Cote d'Or, Bourgogne, France.

Manasses de Châlon Et de Vergy[3531], aged about 26, married Ermengarde de Provence, aged about 16, in 892. They had one son:

Giselbert de Bourgogne[3483] born in 890 in Chalons-Sur-Marne, Marne, Champagne, France; died on 8 April 956 in Paris, France

3533. DUNCAN OF DULE (Howard Charles's thirty-four-times-great-grandfather[3527], see Maternal Ancestry(180) and Maternal Ancestry(189)) was born in 890, in Atholl, Perthshire, Scotland. Duncan was a Thane of Dule, Earl of Caithness. He died in 965, aged about 75, in Perth, Scotland.

GROA THORSTEINSDOTTIR (Howard Charles's thirty-four-times-great-grandmother[3528], see Maternal Ancestry(180) and Maternal Ancestry(189)) was born in 873, in Hvammi, Dala, Iceland, to Thorstein Den Røde Olafsson[3576] and Thurid Eyvindsdatter[3577]. She died in 914, aged about 41, in Hvammi, Dala, Iceland.

Duncan of Dule[3533] married Groa Thorsteinsdottir. They had one son:

Duncan I of Dule[3485] born in 925 in Dunkeld, Perthshire, Scotland; died in 965 in Battle of Duncrub, Perthshire, Scotland

3535. SIGURD HARALDSSON (Howard Charles's thirty-four-times-great-grandfather[3529], see Maternal Ancestry(180) and Maternal Ancestry(189)) was born in 870, in Trondheim, Sor-Trondelag, Norway, to Harald (Fairhair) Halfdansson[3578] and Snefrid Snasesdatter[3579]. Sigurd was a Viking Prince of Norway. He died in 912, aged about 42, in Ringerike, Hadeland, Akerhus, Norway.

3536. DRONNING VEBJOERNSDATTER (Howard Charles's thirty-four-times-great-grandmother[3530], see Maternal Ancestry(180) and Maternal Ancestry(189)) was born in 890, in Hadeland, Askherus, Norway. She died in 967, aged about 77, in Ringike, Buskerud, Norway.

Sigurd Haraldsson[3535] married Dronning Vebjoernsdatter. They had one daughter:

Halvdan Sigurdsdottir[3486] born in 920 in Syr, Norway; died in 960 in Ringerike, Buskerrud, Norway

3537. RANULF II DE ACQUITAINE (Howard Charles's thirty-four-times-great-grandfather[3531], see Maternal Ancestry(181), Maternal Ancestry(229) and Maternal Ancestry(251)) was born on 16 July 855, in Poitiers, Vienne, RAGNVALD EYSTEINSSON (Howard Charles's thirty-four-times-great-grandfather[3533], see Maternal Ancestry(161), Maternal Ancestry(181), Maternal Ancestry(230) and Maternal Ancestry(252)) was born in 825, in Åre Municipality, Jämtland County, Sweden, to Eystein Glumara Ivarsson[3589] and Ascrida Glumra Ragnvaldsdöttr[3590]. Ragnvald was an Earl of Møre, Viking Chief. He died (Burned to death when his house was set on fire) in 894, aged about 69, in Giske, Møre og Romsdal, Norway. He was buried in Giske, Møre og Romsdal, Norway.

Ragnvald Eysteinsson (fl. 865) was the founding Jarl (or Earl) of Møre in Norway, and a close relative and ally of Harald Fairhair, the earliest known King of Norway. In the Norse language he is known as Rognvaldr Eysteinsson and in modern Norwegian as Ragnvald Morejarl. He is sometimes referred to with bynames that may be translated into modern English as "Rognvald the Wise" or "Rognvald the Powerful". The earliest available sources regarding Rognvald are mutually contradictory and were compiled long after he died. The best known are the Norse Sagas, although modern scholars highlight many inconsistencies and improbable claims regarding Rognvald in the sagas, and believe that they must be treated with caution: The texts of the sagas were compiled three centuries after the events described and their accuracy in regard to Rognvald's life and historical significance is now questioned. Hence some scholars instead emphasise other accounts, closer to the historical period in question, such as Irish and Scottish sources.

While Rognvald does appear to have had some kind of role in the founding of the Norse Earldom of Orkney, most historians now doubt claims in the Sagas that Rognvald led one particular "great voyage" a Norwegian expedition that attacked rebel vikings, who had been raiding Norway from bases on Orkney and Shetland, before raiding the Scottish mainland, Ireland and the Isle of Man. It is now generally believed that any such expedition would have occurred after Rognvald's lifetime. A modern authority on Orcadian history, William P. L. Thomson, comments that the story of the "great voyage is so thoroughly ingrained in popular and scholarly history, both ancient and modern, that it comes as a bit of a shock to realise that it might not be true."

Modern scholars also highlight inconsistencies and improbable claims in the sagas' claims regarding: the relationship between Rognvald and Harald; the names and biographies of Rognvald's immediate family, and; the founding of the earldom of Møre.

Rognvald was the father of Torf-Einarr (d. circa 910) an earl of Orkney. Some Norse accounts claimed that another son, Hrölf, settled in France and, under the name Rollo (d. 930), founded the Duchy of Normandy. However, French sources suggest that Rollo's father was an unnamed Danish or Norwegian nobleman, or a viking named Ketill.

Wigeric or Wideric (French: Wigéric or Wéderic) (died before 923) was the count of the Bidgau (pagus Bedensis) and held the rights of a count within the city of Trier. He received also the advocacy of the Abbey of Saint Rumbold at Mechelen from Charles III of France. From 915 or 916, he was the count palatine of Lotharingia. He was the founder of the House of Ardennes. Medieval historians have been unable to precisely pin down Wigeric's origins or rise to power. He possessed lands in the region of Bitburg, in the middle Moselle valley, in the Gutland, the western Eifel, and the Meuse region. At the death of Louis the Child, the Lotharingians rejected the suzerainty of Conrad I and elected Charles of France as their king. At the time, the military authority in Lotharingia was assigned to Count Reginar I of Hainaut (died 915), but at his death it fell to Wigeric, who became count palatine, exercising as such the military authority in Lotharingia.

Wigeric founded the monastery of Hastière (French: L'abbaye d'Hastière) now in Hastière-par-delâ(fr), of which he also assumed the advocacy. There is no historical trace of Wigeric after 919: he probably died between 916 and 919, and was buried in the monastery of Hastière.

Gebhard from the family of Conradines was Duke of Lorraine from 903 until his death. His father was Udo in Lahngau . He was a member of one of the most powerful families at this time of the empire, and played a central role. Gebhard died in June 910 the fight against Hungarians near Augsburg .

3545. IDA VAN EZZO (Howard Charles's thirty-four-times-great-grandmother[3539], see Maternal Ancestry(175) and Maternal Ancestry(196)) was born in 850. Ida was a Countess of Lotheringen. She died on 19 November 910, aged about 60.

Gebhard van Lothingen[3544] married Ida van Ezzo. They had one son:

Odo van Wetterau Konradijn[3493] born in 882 in Wetterau, Schwaben, Bayern, Germany; died on 12 December 949 in Wetterau, Schwaben, Bayern, Germany

3546. GERULF I VAN FRIESLAND (Howard Charles's thirty-four-times-great-grandfather[3540], see Maternal Ancestry(135) and Maternal Ancestry(151)) was born in 800 to Dirk (Dietrich) van Friesland[3587] and Theodrada of The Carolingians[3588]. Gerulf I was a Count of Friesia. He died in 856, aged about 56.

Gerulf is the progenitor of the van der Merwe family. In 775 the Franks under Charlemagne took control of what remained of Frisian territory and incorporated it into their kingdom. Counts appointed by the Frankish rulers were: Gerulf, also Gerulf the Elder, (d. after 865) was the first count of Frisia by this name and an ancestor of the Counts of Holland. Initially dispossessed for opposing emperor Louis the Pious, Gerulf was given back his lands in 839. Gerulf was the son of count Dirk. In the times of emperor Louis the Pious he was count of Friesland as Louis' vassal, and reeve of the Frisians between Vlie and the river Weser. Already in the beginning of his reign, Louis, in an act of grace, had returned to the Frisians what they had lost earlier in their uprisings against his father. This act made the emperor popular among the Frisians but weakened the count's position towards the population. Later, Louis' weak policy against the Normans caused further annoyance in Frisia. In 826, he ceded a part of Frisia that was to be protected by the count of Friesland to the Danish pretender Harald Klak. Harald got the land of Riistringen at the left bank of the Weser to have a refuge from hostile attacks by his kin. However, this was considerably interfering with the power of the counts of Friesland. It is presumed that in that time, Gerulf joined the opposition against the emperor.

A document by the emperor that was created on 8 July 839 in Kreuznach proves that there was an uprising in Friesland against the emperor. During the kinstrife between Louis and his sons, count Gerulf presumably took an active part in the movement against Louis, at the very least he lost his fiefs and his own estates were confiscated. On 8 May 839 after the reconciliation between Louis and his son Lothair, Gerulf's private properties were returned to him. The Kreuznach document mentions possessions of Gerulf in and around Leeuwarden and between Vlie and Lonbach. It is assumed that Gerulf was related to the founders of Corvey Abbey. Furthermore, he may have married a daughter of Wala of Corbie.

Gerulf I fathered one son:

- Gerulf II van Friesland born in 850 in Noordwijk Binnen Nederland; died in 896 in Corvey Duitsland

3549. BALDWIN I, THE IRON HAND OF FLANDERS (Howard Charles's thirty-four-times-great-grandfather[3543], see Maternal Ancestry(137) and Maternal Ancestry(153)) was born in 830, in Flanders, Belgium. Baldwin I, The Iron Hand was a Count of Flanders. He died in 880, aged about 50. He was buried in Abbey of St-Bertin, near Saint-Omer.

Citation: Source 96. Unreliable or estimated. Baldwin I (probably 830s – 879), also known as Baldwin Iron Arm (the epithet is first recorded in the 12th century), was the first Margrave of Flanders. At the time Baldwin first appears in the records he was already a count, presumably in the area of Flanders, but this is not known. Count Baldwin rose to prominence when he eloped with princess Judith, daughter of Charles the Bald, king of West Francia. Judith had previously been married to Æthelwulf and his son (from an earlier marriage) Æthelbald, kings of Wessex, but after the latter's death in 860, she returned to France. Around the Christmas of 861, at the instigation of Baldwin and with her brother Louis's consent, Judith escaped the custody into which she had been placed in the city of Senlis, Oise after her return from England. She fled north with Count Baldwin. Charles had given no permission for a marriage and tried to capture Baldwin, sending letters to Rorik of Dorestad and Bishop Hungarian, forbidding them to shelter the fugitive. After Baldwin and Judith had evaded his attempts to capture them, Charles had his bishops excommunicate the couple. Judith and Baldwin responded by travelling to Rome to plead their case with Pope Nicholas I. Their plea was successful and Charles was forced to accept the situation. The marriage took place on 13 December 862 in Auxerre. By 870, Baldwin had acquired the lay-abbacy of St. Pieter in Ghent and is assumed to have also acquired the counties of Flanders and Waasland, or parts thereof by this time. Baldwin developed himself as a very faithful and stout supporter of Charles and played an important role in the continuing wars against the Vikings. He is named in 877 as one of those willing to support the emperor's son, Louis the Stammerer. During his life, Baldwin expanded his territory into one of the major principalities of Western Francia. He died in 879 and was buried in the Abbey of St-Bertin, near Saint-Omer.
3550. JUDITH CAROLINGIAN (Howard Charles's thirty-four-times-great-grandmother[3544], see Maternal Ancestry(137) and Maternal Ancestry(153)) was born in 843 to Charles The Bald Carolingian[3591] and Ermentrude de Orleans[3592]. She died in 870, aged about 27.

Baldwin I, The Iron Hand of Flanders[3549] married Judith Carolingian. They had one son:

Baldwin The Bald of Flanders[3499] born in 865 in Flanders, Belgium; died on 10 September 918 in Blandijnberg, Ghent, Oost-Vlaanderen, Belgium

3551. ALFRED THE GREAT OF WESSEX (Howard Charles's thirty-four-times-great-grandfather[3545], see Maternal Ancestry(137) and Maternal Ancestry(153)) was born on 9 May 849, in Wantage, Berkshire, Wessex, England, to Æthelwulf of Wessex[3593] and Osburga of Wessex[3594]. Alfred The Great was a King of Wessex. He died on 26 October 899, aged 50, in Winchester, Hampshire, England.

Alfred the Great (849 – 26 October 899) was King of Wessex from 871 to 899. Alfred successfully defended his kingdom against the Viking attempt at conquest, and by the time of his death had become the dominant ruler in England. He is one of only two English monarchs to be given the epithet "the Great", the other being the Scandinavian Cnut the Great. He was also the first King of the West Saxons to style himself "King of the Anglo-Saxons". Details of Alfred's life are described in a work by the 9th-century Welsh scholar and bishop Asser. Alfred had a reputation as a learned and merciful man of a gracious and level-headed nature who encouraged education, proposing that primary education be taught in English rather than Latin, and improved his kingdom's legal system, military structure and his people's quality of life. In 2002 Alfred was ranked number 14 in the BBC's poll of the 100 Greatest Britons.

3552. EALHSWITH OF THE GAINI (Howard Charles's thirty-four-times-great-grandmother[3546], see Maternal Ancestry(137) and Maternal Ancestry(153)) was born in 852, in Gaini Tribal Lands, Kingdom of Mercia, England, UK, to Æthelred Mucel of The Gaini[3595] and Eadburh of Mercia[3596]. Ealhswith was a Saint and Queen of Wessex. She died on 5 December 902, aged about 50, in Saint Mary's Abbey, Winchester, Dorset, England. She was buried in Winchester Cathedral, London, England, UK.

Ealhswith or Ealswitha (died 5 December 902) was the wife of King Alfred the Great. Her father was a Mercian nobleman, Æthelred Mucel, Ealdorman of the Gaini, which is thought to be an old Mercian tribal group. Her mother was Eadburch, a member of the Mercian royal family, and according to the historian Cyril Hart she was a descendant of King Coenwulf of Mercia. She is commemorated as a saint in the Christian East and the West on July 20. She was married to Alfred in 868 at Gainsborough, Lincolnshire, UK. His elder brother Æthelred was then king, and Alfred was regarded as heir apparent.[3][4] The Danes occupied the Mercian town of Nottingham in that year, and the marriage was probably connected with an alliance between Wessex and Mercia.[5] Alfred became king on his brother's death in 871. Ealhswith was very obscure in contemporary sources. She did not witness any known charters, and Asser did not even mention her name in his life of King Alfred. In accordance with ninth century West Saxon custom, she was not given the title of queen. According to King Alfred, this was because of the infamous conduct of a former queen of Wessex called Eadburch, who had accidentally poisoned her husband.

Alfred left his wife three important symbolic estates in his will, Edington in Wiltshire, the site of one important victory over the Vikings, Lambourn in Berkshire, which was near another, and Wantage, his birthplace. These were all part of his bookland, and they stayed in royal possession after her death.

It was probably after Alfred's death in 899 that Ealhswith founded the convent of St Mary's Abbey, Winchester, known as the Nunnaminster. She died on 5 December 902, and was buried in her son Edward's new Benedictine abbey, the New Minster, Winchester. She is commemorated in two early tenth century manuscripts as "the true and dear lady of the English".

Alfred The Great of Wessex[3551] married Ealhswith of The Gaini. They had two children:

Pepin (817 - after 854) was the first count of Vermandois, lord of Senlis, Péronne, and Saint Quentin. He was the son of King Bernard of Italy (a grandson of Charlemagne) and Cunigunda of Laon.

Pepin first appears in 834 as a count to the north of the Seine during the reign of his granduncle Louis the Pious, Son and successor to his Great-grandfather Charlemagne aged 17 and then appears as same again in 840 aged 23. In that year, he supported his 45 year old uncle Lothair I against his aged great uncle the 62 year old Louis the Pious.

Pepin's wife is unknown, she has been spuriously called "Rothaide de Bobbio". His heir inherited much Nibelungid territory and so historian K. F. Werner hypothesized a marriage to a daughter of Theodoric Nibelung.

3554. ROTAÍDE DE BOBBIO (Howard Charles's thirty-four-times-great-grandmother[3549], see Maternal Ancestry(138), Maternal Ancestry(152), Maternal Ancestry(154) and Maternal Ancestry(245)) was born in 820, in Tréves, Gard, Languedoc-Roussillon, France, to Wala de Bobbio[3599] and Rotilde de Toulouse[3600]. She died on 15 June 858, aged about 37, in Milan, Milano, Lombardia, Italy.

Pépin II de Péronne[3553] married Rothaïde de Bobbio. They had three sons:

Pepin III of Senlis And Bretagne[3497] born in 846 in Vermandois, Normandy, France; died in 893 in Normandy, France

Charles III (17 September 879 – 7 October 929), called the Simple or the Straightforward (from the Latin Carolus Simplex),[a] was the King of West Francia from 898 until 922 and the King of Lotharingia from 911 until 919–23. He was a member of the Carolingian dynasty.

On 6 December 884, King Carloman II of West Francia died without a male heir and his half-brother, the future Charles the Simple, was just a five-year-old boy. Because of this, their cousin Charles the Fat, already Holy Roman Emperor and King of East Francia, was invited by the nobles of the Kingdom to assume the throne. Since the beginning, the new monarch was forced to deal with constant Viking raids, with little success. After three years of incompetent government, Charles the Fat was finally deposed by the Diet of Tribur in 887.

Faced with the growing threat of northern invaders, the local nobles again rejected the succession of Charles the Simple because he was too young, and Odo, Count of Paris (member of the Robertian dynasty) was chosen as the new King of West Francia, after successfully defending Paris against the Vikings, led by Rollo. In 893, aided by Archbishop Falk of Reims, Charles the Simple attempted to reclaim the throne, but in vain. By 897, the young prince ruled only the city of Laon before Odo on his deathbed designated him as his successor. Following the death of Odo in January 898, Charles the Simple finally assumed the title of king of West Francia. Soon the new monarch showed his ambition to conquer Lotharingia, the main objective of all the monarchs of West Francia since Charles the Bald. Lotharingia was the cradle of the Carolingian dynasty. Charlemagne's ancestors, the Pippinids were from Lotharingia (Herstal, Jupille...). After the Treaty of Verdun in 843, the Lotharingia was part of Middle Francia for a short time and both West and East Francia tried to gain control over it. Arnulf of Carinzia, King of East Francia prevented this by entrusting the land to his son Zwentibold in 895. Zwentibold was hated by his subjects, so Charles the Simple decided to invade in 898 after being called by Count Reginar of Hainaut. After seizing Aachen and capturing Charlemagne's Palace at Nijmegen, he returned to France at the request of the German bishops. A few years later, in September 911, the Lotharingian aristocracy again called on Charles the Simple after the death of Louis the Child, the last Carolingian ruler in East Francia.

Charles the Simple was crowned King of Lotharingia in early November 911. However, the constant absences of the new monarch (who preferred to stay in Aachen or Thionville), quickly irritated the Lotharingian nobility (who feared for their own independence) and nobles of France, who saw this inclination as an affront.[15] The situation was even more complicated because, according to Flodoard, Charles the Simple refused to march against the Hungarians who threatened Lotharingia (only Archbishop Hervé de Reims was present there) and finally caused an open rebellion when he attempt to dispossess his own aunt, Abbess Rothilde (also mother-in-law of Hugh the Great), from Chelles Abbey in order to give it to his favourite, Hageno (a relative of his first wife Frederuna).

From 920 to 922, Charles the Simple was in trouble. Although he signed the Treaty of Bonn with king Henry the Fowler of East Francia on 7 November 921, he had to fight on two fronts: one against Duke Giselbert of Lotharingia and the other against Hugh the Great, irritated by the treatment of his mother-in-law. Defeated, in June 922 Charles the Simple took refuge in Lotharingia, and the nobles of the West Francia declared him deposed from the throne, choosing as the new King Robert, Count of Paris, brother of the late King Odo and father of Hugh the Great.

Charles the Simple returned to France to regain the throne. His army, supported by a Lotharingian army and a group of soldiers, faced King Robert's army at Soissons in June 923. According toRicherus, Robert was killed in battle by Count Fulbert[18] or according to other historians, by Charles the Simple. Despite the death of Robert, his army won the battle and Charles the Simple had to escape from the battlefield. The French nobles elected Raoul of Burgundy (Robert's son-in-law) as their new King, with his coronation taking place on 13 July 923 at St Médard, Soissons.

During the summer, Charles the Simple was captured by Herbert II, Count of Vermandois (another son-in-law of King Robert) at Château-Thierry; meanwhile, King Henry I of Germany took advantage of the situation to seize and add Lotharingia to his domains, after giving his daughter Gerberga of Saxony in marriage to Duke Giselbert.

After some time at Château-Thierry, the humiliated Charles the Simple was transferred in 924 to Péronne, where he died on 7 October 929 and was immediately buried in the local Monastery of Saint-Fursy. The legitimate Carolingian heir was now Louis, but King Rudolph retained the throne and ruled until his death from illness on 15 January 936 at Auxerre, being buried in the Abbey of Sainte-Colombe of Sens. The nobility then discussed who could be the next King, because Rudolph had died without surviving male heirs. Finally, the nobles unanimously summoned back Louis, thanks to the decisive support of Hugh the Great to France to become their new King.

Charles III (The Simple) married his indirect relation, Eadgifu of Wessex [3458].

Lothair I or Lothar I (Dutch: Lotharius, German: Lothar, French: Lothaire, Italian: Lotario) (795 – 29 September 855) was the Holy Roman Emperor (817–855, co-ruling with his father until 840), and the King of Bavaria (815–817), Italy (818–855) and Middle Francia (840–855). Lothair was the eldest son of the Carolingian emperor Louis the Pious and his wife Ermengarde of Hesbaye, daughter of Ingerman the duke of Hesbaye. On several occasions, Lothair led his full-brothers Pippin I of Aquitaine and Louis the German in revolt against their father to protest against attempts to make their half-brother Charles the Bald a co-heir to the Frankish domains. Upon the father's death, Charles and Louis joined forces against Lothair in a three-year civil war (840–843). The struggles between the brothers led directly to the breakup of the Frankish Empire assembled by their grandfather Charlemagne, and laid the foundation for the development of modern France and Germany.

3566. ROBERT III OF WORMS (Howard Charles's thirty-five-times-great-grandfather[3560], see Maternal Ancestry(228), Maternal Ancestry(243) and Maternal Ancestry(254)) was born in 789, in Worms, to Robert van Haspengau[3609] and Theodora of Worms[3610]. Robert III was a Count of Worms and of Oberheingau. He died on 7 December 834, aged about 45, in Worms.
Robert III (800–834), also called Rutpert, was the Count of Worms and Rheingau of a noble Frankish family called the Robertians. He was the son of Robert of Hesbaye. By his wife Waldrada d'Orleans he had his only verified son, Robert the Strong. They are also believed to be the parents of Odo I, Count of Troyes, and Guntram, Count of Wormsgau. His first cousin was Ermengard, wife of the Frankish emperor Louis the Pious. His cousin Chrodogang was Archbishop of Metz and abbot of the Lorsch Abbey. An uncle of Robert was Count Cancor, founder of Lorsch Abbey. Through Robert the Strong he was grandfather of two kings of Western Francia, Odo and Robert. He was the great-great-grandfather of Hugo Capet, the founder of the Capetian dynasty which ruled France until the French Revolution in 1792 and then again from 1814 until 1848 with the exception of the Hundred Days in 1815.

3567. WALDRADA D'ORLEANS (Howard Charles's thirty-five-times-great-grandmother[3561], see Maternal Ancestry(228), Maternal Ancestry(243) and Maternal Ancestry(254)) was born in 785, in Orléans, Neustrie, Frankish Empire. Waldrada was a Countess of Wormsgau. She died on 9 April 868, aged about 82, in Lorraine, France.

Robert III of Worms[3566], aged about 19, married Waldrada D'Orleans, aged about 23, in 808 in France. They had one son:

Robert VI (The Strong) of Worms[3519] born in 830; died on 2 July 866 in Brissarthe

3568. HUGH DE TOURS (Howard Charles's thirty-five-times-great-grandfather[3562], see Maternal Ancestry(196), Maternal Ancestry(213), Maternal Ancestry(228), Maternal Ancestry(243), Maternal Ancestry(244) and Maternal Ancestry(254)) was born in 775, in Alsace, France, to Luitfrid II van Alsace[3611] and Hiltrude van Haspengouw[3612]. Hugh was a Count of Tours. He died (Plague) in 837, aged about 62, in Italy.

Hugh (or Hugo) (c. 780 – 837) was the count of Tours and Sens during the reigns of Charlemagne and Louis the Pious, until his disgrace in February 828. Hugh had many possessions in Alsace, as well as the County of Sens. He also held the convent of St-Julien-d'Auxerre. He appeared in 811 as an envoy or ambassador to Constantinople with Haido, Bishop of Basel, and Aio, Duke of Friuli, to renew the Pax Nicephori. In 821, he allied himself by marriage to the royal family: his daughter Ermengard married Louis' son Lothair. In 824, he took part in an expedition in Brittany and, in 826, he accompanied the Empress Judith to the baptism of Harald Klak in Ingelheim. His other daughter, Adelaide, married Conrad I, Count of Auxerre (died 862). She is sometimes said to have taken as her second husband Robert the Strong. She was dead by 886, when Walahfrid Strabo included her epitaph in a poem of his. In 827, Hugh, along with Matfrid of Orléans, was commissioned by Louis to recruit an army with his son Pepin I of Aquitaine and repel the invasion of theMarca Hispanica by the Moslem general Abu Marwan. Hugh and Matfrid delayed until the threat had passed. For this he was given the nickname Timidus or the Timid. Barcelona being the greatest military accomplishment of Louis' career, the Spanish March meant much to him and Hugh and Matfrid found themselves greatly disfavoured at court. They were deposed in February of the next year. He remained very influential as the father-in-law of Lothair. He joined Matfrid in inciting Lothair to rebellion and had all his lands confiscated in Gaul. He remained highly influential in Italy, where Lothair created him "duke of Locate" (dux de Locate). He became a benefactor of the cathedral of Monza. According to the Annales Bertiniani, he and Lambert of Nantes died during an epidemic in Italy in 837. News of their deaths—and that of Wala of Corbie in an earlier Italian epidemic in the fall of the previous year—greatly distressed Louis the Pious, but the opponents of Lothair interpreted it as divine judgement.

3569. AVA DE MORVOIS (Howard Charles's thirty-five-times-great-grandmother[3563], see Maternal Ancestry(196), Maternal Ancestry(213), Maternal Ancestry(228), Maternal Ancestry(243), Maternal Ancestry(244) and Maternal Ancestry(254)) was born on 4 January 779, in Tours, Indre-et-Loire, Touraine/Centre, France, to Girard de Morvois[3613] and Rotrude de Austrasia[3614]. Ava was a Countess of Tours. She died on 4 November 839, aged 60, in Upper Alsace, Tours, or Fezensac, France. She was buried in Upper Alsace, Tours, or Fezensac, France.

Hugh de Tours[3568], aged about 23, married Ava de Morvois, aged about 19, in 798. They had four children:
Ermengarde de Tours[3561] born in 800 in Tours, Indre-et-Loire, Centre, France; died on 20 March 851 in Abbaye Derstein, Strasbourg, Alsace, France

Torquet Des Reimes[3617] born in 801 in Rennes, Ille-et-Vilaine, Brittany, France; died in 854 in Rennes, Ille-et-Vilaine, Brittany, France

Adelheid van Tours[3628] born in 809 in Tours, France; died on 21 May 866 in Orleans, France

Adélaïs de Tours[3520] born in 819 in Tours, Indre-et-Loire, Centre-Val de Loire, France; died in 882 in Tours, Indre-et-Loire, Centre-Val de Loire, France

3570. BASIL I OF BYZANTIUM (Howard Charles's thirty-five-times-great-grandfather[3564], see Maternal Ancestry(233)) was born in 811, in Charioupolis, Macedonia, to Bardas D'Adrianople Mamikonian[3615] and Pankalo of Armenia[3616]. Basil I was an Emperor of Byzantium. He died (Hunting accident) in 886, aged about 75, in Constantinople.

Basil I, called the Macedonian; 811 – August 29, 886) was a Byzantine Emperor who reigned from 867 to 886. Born a simple peasant in the Byzantine theme of Macedonia, he rose in the Imperial court, and usurped the Imperial throne from Emperor Michael III (r. 842–867). Despite his humble origins, he showed great ability in running the affairs of state, leading to a revival of Imperial power and a renaissance of Byzantine art. He was perceived by the Byzantines as one of their greatest emperors, and the Macedonian dynasty, which he founded, ruled over what is regarded as the most glorious and prosperous era of the Byzantine Empire. Basil's spirits declined in 879, when his eldest and favorite son Constantine died. Basil now raised his youngest son, Alexander, to the rank of co-emperor. Basil disliked the bookish Leo, on occasion physically beating him; he probably suspected Leo of being the son of Michael III. In his later years, Basil's relationship with Leo was clouded by the suspicion that the latter might wish to avenge the murder of Michael III. Leo was eventually imprisoned by Basil after the detection of a suspected plot, but the imprisonment resulted in public rioting; Basil threatened to blind Leo but was dissuaded by Patriarch Photios. Leo was eventually released after the passage of three years. Basil died on August 29, 886 from a fever contracted after a serious hunting accident when his belt was caught in the antlers of a deer, and he was allegedly dragged 16 miles through the woods. He was saved by an attendant who cut him loose with a knife, but he suspected the attendant of trying to assassinate him and had the man executed shortly before he himself died. One of the first acts of Leo VI as ruling emperor was to rebury, with great ceremony, the remains of Michael III in the Imperial Mausoleum within the Church of the Holy Apostles in Constantinople. This did much to confirm in public opinion the view that Leo considered himself to have been Michael's son.

3571. EUDOXIA INGERINA (Howard Charles's thirty-five-times-great-grandmother[3565], see Maternal Ancestry(233)) was born in 840. Eudoxia was an Empress of Byzantium. She died in 882, aged about 42.

Eudokia was the daughter of Inger, a Varangian guard in the emperor's service. Her mother was a Martiniake and a distant relative to the imperial family, as a close niece of Michael II and a distant niece of emperor Heraclius and his second wife and niece Martina. According to a posterior version by Christian Settipani, she would be the daughter of Inger Martinakios, Logothete, son of Anastasios Martinakios, a Byzantine noble fl. 817 and officer in 819, deceased after 821, and wife, a sister of emperor Michael II, and grandson of Theophylactos Martinakios, son of Martinakes, grandson of Martinos and great-grandson of Andreas, nephew of empress Martina, niece and second wife of emperor Heraclius. A decade into Basil's reign, Eudokia became involved with another man, whom the emperor ordered to be tonsured as monk. In 882, she selected Theophano as wife for her son Leo, and died shortly afterwards.

Basil I of Byzantium[3570], aged about 54, married Eudoxia Ingerina, aged about 25, in 865. They had one son.

Leo VI (The Wise) of Byzantium[3523] born on 19 September 866 in Constantinople; died on 11 May 912 in Constantinople
3572. TERTULLUS DE GÂTAINAS D'ANJOU (Howard Charles’s thirty-five-times-great-grandfather[3566], see Maternal Ancestry(177), Maternal Ancestry(231), Maternal Ancestry(244) and Maternal Ancestry(255)) was born in 823, in Rennes, Anjou, France, to Torquet Des Reimes[3617] and Bava D'Anjou[3618]. Tertullus De Gâtinais was a Sénéchal d'Anjou. He died in 870, aged about 47, in Chateau Landon, Seine Et Marne, Ile De France, France. He was buried in St Martin, Tours, Indre-et-Loire, France.

3573. PETRONELLE DE GÂTAINAS D'AUXERRE (Howard Charles's thirty-five-times-great-grandmother[3567], see Maternal Ancestry(177), Maternal Ancestry(231), Maternal Ancestry(244) and Maternal Ancestry(255)) was born in 825, in Rheineck, Duchy of Burgundy, Kingdom of the Franks, to Hugo de Noaille de Saint-Bertin[3619] and Regina de Saint-Quentin[3620]. Petronelle De Gâtinais was a Countess of Anjou. She died in 845, aged about 20, in Anjou, France. She was buried in Basilique de St-Martin, Tours, France.

Tertullus De Gâtinais D’Anjou[3572] married Petronelle De Gâtinais D’Auxerre. They had one son:

Ingelgerius D'Anjou[3527] born in 845 in Anjou, Normandie, France; died in 888 in Saint Martin, Tours, Indre-et-Loire, France

3574. BOSON V DE BOURGOGNE (Howard Charles's thirty-five-times-great-grandfather[3568], see Maternal Ancestry(177), Maternal Ancestry(246) and Maternal Ancestry(257)) was born in 850, in Metz, Moselle, Lorraine, France. Boson V was a King of Burgundy. He died on 11 January 887, aged about 36, in Vienne, Isere, Rhone-Alpes, France.

Ermengard of Italy, also Ermengarda, Ermengarde, or Irmengard (843-896) was a queen and regent of Provence. She was the only surviving daughter of Louis II, Holy Roman Emperor. Born in 843, in the reign of her grandfather Lothair I, the year that her grandfather and great-uncles partitioned the empire of their own father, she grew up relatively privileged. Her father, Louis II was the eldest son and co-emperor of Lothair I. In 855, when she was 12, Emperor Lothair I died at the age of 60, and her father became Holy Roman Emperor. In 876 aged 33, she married Boso, a Frankish nobleman of the Bosonid family who was related to the Carolingian dynasty and who rose to become King of Lower Burgundy and Provence. In May 878, she and her husband sheltered Pope John VIII, who was taking refuge from the Saracens, in Arles. After her husband's coup d'état in October 879, she helped defend his cities from her Carolingian relatives. In 880, she successfully defended Vienne itself, the capital, from the combined forces of Charles the Fat and the co-ruling kings of France, Louis III and Carloman. In August 881, the newly crowned Emperor Charles the Fat pillaged and burned Vienne, forcing Ermengard and her children to take refuge in Autun with her brother-in-law Richard, Duke of Burgundy. Meanwhile, Boso fled into Provence. On Boso's death in January 887, the Provençal barons elected Ermengard to act as his regent, with the support of Richard. In May, Ermengard travelled with her son Louis to the court of Charles the Fat, and received his recognition of the young Louis as king. Charles adopted Louis as his son and put both mother and son under his protection. In May 889, she travelled to Charles’ successor, Arnulf, to make submission anew.

Boson V de Bourgogne[3574], aged about 26, married Ermengarde Adelaïde D'Italie, aged about 24, in 876. They had one daughter:

Ermengarde de Provence[3532] born in 876 in Châlons-en-Champagne, Champagne-Ardenne, France; died on 12 April 935 in Reulle Vergy, Cote d'Or, Bourgogne, France
3576. THORSTEIN DEN RØDE OLAFSSON (Howard Charles's thirty-five-times-great-grandfather[3570], see Maternal Ancestry(180) and Maternal Ancestry(249)) was born in 846, in Dublin, Ireland. He died in 891, aged about 45, in Caithness, Scotland.

Thorstein the Red or Thorstein Olafsson was a viking chieftain who flourished in late ninth-century Scotland. He was born around 850 AD and was the son of Olaf the White, King of Dublin, and Aud the Deep-minded, who was the daughter of Ketil Flatnose. After the death of Olaf, Aud and Thorstein went to live in the Hebrides, then under Ketil's rule. Thorstein eventually became a warlord and allied with the Jarl of Orkney, Sigurd Eysteinsson. Together Thorstein and Sigurd waged a series of campaigns in Caithness, Sutherland, Ross, Moray, and a number of other regions, eventually receiving tribute from half of Scotland.[4] However, the Scottish chieftains plotted against Thorstein, and he was killed; the exact nature of his death is unknown but it probably took place around 880 or 890. After Thorstein's death Aud left Caithness, sojourning for a while in Orkney before settling with other members of her clan in Iceland.

Thorstein married Thurid, the daughter of Eyvind the Easterner. Thorstein and Thurid had a son, Olaf Feilan, and a number of daughters, including Groa, Thorgerd, Olof, Thorhild, and Yigdis.[6] A woman named Unn, wife of Thorolf Mostur-beard, claimed to be the daughter of Thorstein, but this claim was viewed by other Icelanders with scepticism.[7].

3577. THURID EYVINDSDATTER (Howard Charles's thirty-five-times-great-grandmother[3571], see Maternal Ancestry(180) and Maternal Ancestry(249)) was born in 847, in Amle, Sogn og Fjordane, Norway, to Eyvind "The Eastener" Bjarnasson[3623] and Rafertach Maccearbhall[3624]. She died in 879, aged about 32, in Hvammur, Dala, Ireland.

Thorstein Den Røde Olafsson[3576] married Thurid Eyvindsdatter. They had one daughter:

Louis the Stammerer (French: Louis le Bègue) (1 November 846 – 10 April 879) was the King of Aquitaine and later the King of West Francia. He was the eldest son of emperor Charles the Bald and Ermentrude de Orléans. Louis the Stammerer was physically weak and outlived his father by only two years. He succeeded his younger brother Charles the Child as the ruler of Aquitaine in 866 and his father in West Francia in 877, but he was never crowned Emperor. In the French monarchial system, he is considered Louis II.

During the peace negotiations between his father and Erispoe, duke of Brittany, Louis was betrothed to an unnamed daughter of Erispoe in 856. It is not known if this was the same daughter who later married Gurivant. The contract was broken in 857 after Erispoe's murder. Louis was married twice. His first wife Ansgerde of Burgundy had two sons: Louis (born in 863) and Carloman (born in 866), both of whom became kings of West Francia, and two daughters: Hildegarde (born in 864) and Gisela (865–884).

His second wife Adelaide of Paris had one daughter, Ermentrude (875–914) and a posthumous son, Charles the Simple, who would become, long after his elder brothers' deaths, king of West Francia.
ADÉLAÏS OF PARIS (Howard Charles's thirty-five-times-great-grandmother[3575], see Maternal Ancestry(181), Maternal Ancestry(229), Maternal Ancestry(251) and Maternal Ancestry(258)) was born on 10 April 853, in Paris, France. Æthelwulf Old English for "Noble Wolf"; died 13 January 858) was King of Wessex from 839 to 858. In 825, his father, King Egbert, defeated King Beornwulf of Mercia, ending a long Mercian dominance over Anglo-Saxon England south of the Humber. Egbert sent Æthelwulf with an army to Kent, where he expelled the Mercian sub-king and was himself appointed sub-king. After 830, Egbert maintained good relations with Mercia, and this was continued by Æthelwulf when he became king in 839, the first son to succeed his father as West Saxon king since 641.

The Vikings were not a major threat to Wessex during Æthelwulf's reign. In 843, he was defeated in a battle against the Vikings at Carhampton in Somerset, but he achieved a major victory at the Battle of Aclea in 851. In 853 he joined a successful Mercian expedition to Wales to restore the traditional Mercian hegemony, and in the same year his daughter Æthelswith married King Burgred of Mercia. In 855 Æthelwulf went on pilgrimage to Rome. In preparation he gave a "decimation", donating a tenth of his personal property to his subjects; he appointed his eldest surviving son Æthelbald to act as King of Wessex in his absence, and his next son Æthelberht to rule Kent and the south-east. Æthelwulf spent a year in Rome, and on his way back he married Judith, the daughter of the West Frankish King Charles the Bald.
When Æthelwulf returned to England, Æthelbald refused to surrender the West Saxon throne, and Æthelwulf agreed to divide the kingdom, taking the east and leaving the west in Æthelbald's hands. On Æthelwulf's death in 858 he left Wessex to Æthelbald and Kent to Æthelberht, but Æthelbald's death only two years later led to the reunification of the kingdom.
In the 20th century Æthelwulf's reputation among historians was poor: he was seen as excessively pious and impractical, and his pilgrimage was viewed as a desertion of his duties. Historians in the 21st century see him very differently, as a king who consolidated and extended the power of his dynasty, commanded respect on the continent, and dealt more effectively than most of his contemporaries with Viking attacks. He is regarded as one of the most successful West Saxon kings, who laid the foundations for the success of his son, Alfred the Great.

Wala (c. 755 – 31 August 836) was a son of Bernard, son of Charles Martel, and one of the principal advisers of his cousin Charlemagne, of Charlemagne's son Louis the Pious, and of Louis's son Lothair I. He succeeded his brother Adalard as abbot of Corbie and its new daughter foundation, Corvey, in 826 or 827. Originally a count (comes) attached to the palace under Charlemagne (811), Wala was forced to enter the monastery of Corbie in 814 as part of a purging of palace rivals and hangers-on by Louis the Pious. In 816 he and Adalard were given the responsibility of organising the government of the convent of Herford, recently passed into Louis's hands at the Council of Aachen. In the 820s Wala became a strong opponent of royal/imperial control of church benefices. He was back at court in 822 as a concilliator (councillor).

According to Paschasius Radbertus, Wala alleged on one occasion that the "army of clerics" (i.e. chaplains) resident at the Palace of Aachen (and perhaps itinerant with the emperor) served only for personal gain and did not form a legitimate ecclesiastical institution. In 831 Wala left Corbie; in 834 he was abbot of Bobbio. His feast day is Aug. 31.

For political reasons, to forge ties of kinship with the Carolingian dynasty, the imperial family of Francia, in 855 she was married to the Carolingian Lothair II, the second son of Emperor Lothair I. It is very probably that Lothair II, at the time of marriage, already had a mistress named Waldryda, who, according to historian Baron Ernouf, was of noble Gallo-Roman family, whose brother, Thietgaud, was the bishop of Trier and her uncle, Ghunter, was archbishop of Cologne, while, according to the Annales Novienses, she was the sister of Ghunter, according to Vita Sancti Deicoli, Waldryda was related to Eberhard II, Count of Nordgau (included Strasbourg) family of Etichonids. Soon after their marriage, Lothair’s father died and Lothair II inherited Middle Francian territory west of the Rhine stretching from the North Sea to the Jura mountains, Teutberga was not capable of bearing children and Lothair’s reign was chiefly occupied by his efforts to obtain an annulment of their marriage, prompted also by his affection for Waldryda. His relations with his uncles Charles the Bald and Louis the German were influenced by his desire to obtain their support for this endeavor. Although quarrels and reconciliations between the three kings followed each other in quick succession, generally Louis favoured annulment, and Charles opposed it, while neither lost sight of the fact that Lothair had no legitimate sons to inherit his lands.

In 857 Lothair imprisoned Teutberga accusing her of incest with her brother Huchert before their marriage. A church synod of all the bishops of Lotharingia held at the behest of Lothair II concerning his accusations was presided over by archbishops Ghunter and Thietgaud, both Waldrada's relations. But Hucbert took up arms on her behalf, and after she had submitted successfully to the ordeal of boiling water, Lothair was comelled to restore her in 858.
Still pursuing his purpose, Lothair won the support of his brother, Emperor Louis II, by a cession of lands and obtained the consent of the local clergy to the annulment and to his marriage with Waldrada, which took place in 862. A synod of Frankish bishops met at Metz in 863 and confirmed this decision. Teutberga took refuge in the court of Charles the Bald. She appealed to Pope Nicholas I who voided the decision of the synod and Lothair's marriage with Waldrada. An attack on Rome by the emperor was without result, and in 865 Lothair was threatened with excommunication and was convinced that Louis and Charles at their recent meeting had discussed the partition of his kingdom. Lothair accepted the pope's ruling and again took Teutberga back. Teutberga, however, either from inclination or compulsion, now expressed her desire for an annulment, and Lothair went to Italy to obtain the assent of the new pope, Adrian II. Placing a favourable interpretation upon the words of the pope, he set out on the return journey, when he was seized with fever and died at Piacenza on 8 August 869. Teutberga then retired to the abbey of St. Glossinde of Metz until her death on 11
November 875.
The illegitimate status of Lothair II's only son, Hugo, by Waldrada, was not rectified before Lothair's death, and Lothair's kingdom was divided between his uncles Charles the Bald and Louis the German by the Treaty of Meerssen.

Hugh (802–844) was the illegitimate son of Charlemagne and his concubine Regina, with whom he had one other son: Bishop Drogo of Metz (801–855). Along with Drogo and his illegitimate half-brother Theodoric. Hugh was tonsured and sent from the palace of Aachen to a monastery in 818 by his father's successor, Louis the Pious, following the revolt of King Bernard of Italy. Hugh rose to become abbot of several abbeys: Saint-Quentin (822/3), Lobbes (836), and Saint-Bertin (836). In 834, he was made imperial archchancellor by his half-brother.

On Louis's death in 840, his sons began to fight over the inheritance. In 841, Hugh sided with his nephew Charles the Bald against Louis and Lothair.[3] In 842, Charles spent Christmas with Hugh at Saint-Quentin on his eastern frontier. Hugh's interventions probably secured Saint-Quentin for Charles's kingdom in the division that came with the Treaty of Verdun (843).

Hugh was part of the small army which, on its way south to join Charles at Toulouse, was ambushed by Pippin II in the Angoumois on 14 June 844. Hugh was killed by a lance, and according to the anonymous verse lament composed about his death—called the Rhythmus de obitu Hugonis abbatis or Planctus Ugoni abbatis[6]—Charles wept over his body.

Hugh is sometimes confused with Hugh the Abbot, resulting in the erroneous claim that he had a daughter, Petronilla, who married Tertullus of Anjou, the semi-legendary father of Ingelger, first count of Anjou. The late accounts of the Angevin origins actually make Petronilla a kinswoman of Hugh the Abbot, not of Charlemagne's son.

Louis II, sometimes called the Younger[ (825 – 12 August 875), was the King of Italy and Roman Emper or from 844, co-ruling with his father Lothair I until 855, after which he ruled alone. Louis's usual title was imperator augustus ("august emperor"), but he used imperator Romanorum ("emperor of the Romans") after his conquest of Bari in 871, which led to poor relations with Byzantium. He was called imperator Italiae ("emperor of Italy") in West Francia while the Byzantines called him Basileus Phrangias ("Emperor of the Franks"). The chronicler Andreas Bergomatis, who is the main source for Louis's activities in southern Italy, notes that "after his death a great tribulation came to Italy."

3622. ENGELBERGE D'ALSACE (Howard Charles's thirty-six-times-great-grandmother[3619], see Maternal Ancestry(225), Maternal Ancestry(246) and Maternal Ancestry(257)) was born in 830. Engelberge was an Empress of the Holy Roman Empire. She died in 930, aged about 60.

Engelberga (or Angilberga, died between 896 and 901) was the wife of Louis II, Holy Roman Emperor and remained the Holy Roman Empress to his death on 12 August 875. As empress, she exerted a powerful influence over her husband. She was probably the daughter of Adelchis I of Parma and a member of one of the most powerful families in the Kingdom of Italy at that time, the Supponids. Born around 830, she probably spent her youth in Pavia. She married Louis II on October 5, 851, but did not play a role in political life until after the death of his father, Lothair I, in 855. Upon his death, Lothair's kingdom was divided between his three sons and, as the eldest, Louis received Italy and the title of emperor. In 856, the imperial couple were hosted in Venice by Doge Pietro Tradonico and his son Giovanni Tradonico. A few years later, Engelberga began to exert her influence in a conflict between Pope Nicholas I and Archbishop John of Ravenna. Seen as insubordinate by the Pope, John was thrice summoned to appear before a papal tribunal. Instead, he took refuge in the imperial court at Pavia, where Engelberga attempted to intervene with Rome on his behalf. Though ultimately unsuccessful, the incident was the beginning of Engelberga's efforts to assert her influence as empress. In 862, Louis's brother Lothair II sought to annul his marriage to Teutberga, as she had failed to bear him any children. The local bishops had blessed the annulment and Lothair's subsequent remarriage, but in November 863, Pope Nicolas summoned the bishops to Rome and excommunicated them for their violation of ecclesiastical law. The bishops fled to Louis's court and pleaded their case, resulting in the Emperor laying siege to the Holy See in January 864. Engelberga sent a communication to Nicholas, guaranteeing his safety if he were to come to court to negotiate with her husband. Their meeting resulted in an agreement whereby the bishops were allowed to return and the siege was ended.

In subsequent years she was granted additional titles by her husband, due in large part to her diplomatic role. In 868, she became abbess of San Salvatore, Brescia, a convent with a history of royal abbesses. In January 872, the aristocracy tried to have her removed, as she had not borne the emperor any sons. Instead, Louis opened negotiations with Louis the German, King of East Francia, to make him his heir. In order to sideline Engelberga, the nobility elected Charles the Bald, King of West Francia, on Louis's death in 875. Boso V of Arles, a faithful of Charles, kidnapped Engelberga and her only surviving daughter, Ermengard. He forced the latter to marry him in June 876, at the same time he was made Charles' governor in Italy with the title of dux.

With Engelberga's backing, Boso declared himself King of Provence on 15 October 879. Subsequently, Engelberga was banished to Swabia. After Charles the Fat's forces took Vienne in 882, Engelberga was allowed to return to Italy. In 896, she became abbess of her own foundation of San Sisto, Piacenza, but died shortly afterward.

3623. EYVIND "THE EASTENER" BJARNASSON (Howard Charles's thirty-six-times-great-grandfather[3620], see Maternal Ancestry(180) and Maternal Ancestry(249)) was born in 825, in Gautland, Sweden, to Bjarni Gaustski Herjölfsson[3658] and Hlíf Hróľfsdóttir[3659]. Eyvind "The Eastener" became known as 'The Eastener'. The Eastener was a Viking. He died in 900, aged about 75, in Ireland. He was buried in Dublin, County Dublin, Ireland. Citation: Source 96. Eyvind Bjarnasson (nicknamed Eyvind of the East) (820 - 900) was a Viking originally from Amle, kingdom of Sogn, Norway. Son of Bjarni el Gauta and Hlif Hrolfsdatter (n. 798). Eyvind was leader in the Hebrides that according to some Nordic sagas ruled some hiberno-nordic enclaves of Ireland in century IX. Its historical figure appears in Heimskringla of Snorri Sturluson and the anonymous saga of Grettir where it is quoted that its lineage came from kings. His half-brother Thrand Bjarnasson belonged to a group of Vikings that devastated the coasts of Ireland, Hebrides and Scotland.

3624. RAFERTACH MACCEARBHALL (Howard Charles's thirty-six-times-great-grandmother[3621], see Maternal Ancestry(180) and Maternal Ancestry(249)) was born in 826, in Ireland. She died in 897, aged about 71, in Ireland.

Eyvind "The Eastener" Bjarnasson[3623] married Rafertach Maccearbhall. They had one daughter:

Thurid Eyvindsdatter[3577] born in 847 in Amle, Sogn og Fjordane, Norway; died in 879 in Hvammur, Dala, Ireland

3625. HALFDAN "THE BLACK" GUDROTHSSON (Howard Charles's thirty-six-times-great-grandfather[3622], see Maternal Ancestry(180) and Maternal Ancestry(250)) was born in 821, in Sogn, Oppland, Vestfold, Norway, to Guthroth "The Generous, The Hunting King" Halfdansson[3660] and Alfhild Alfarinsdatter[3661]. Halfdan "The Black" became known as 'The Black'. The Black was a Viking King of Norway. He died in 863, aged about 42, in Røykensvik, Randsfjorden, Oppland, Norway.

3626. RAGNHILD SIGURDSDATTER (Howard Charles's thirty-six-times-great-grandmother[3623], see Maternal Ancestry(180) and Maternal Ancestry(250)) was born in 830, in Buskerud, Buskerud, Norway. She died in 855, aged about 25, in Vestfold, Norway.

Halfdan "The Black" Gudrothsson[3625] married Ragnhild Sigurdsdatter. They had one son:

Harald (Fairhair) Halfdansson[3578] born in 850 in Hedmark, Oppland, Norway; died in 933 in Haugesund, Rogaland, Norway

3627. KOENRAAD I VAN BEIEREN (Howard Charles's thirty-six-times-great-grandfather[3625], see Maternal Ancestry(175) and Maternal Ancestry(196)) was born in 800, in Saint-Germain D'auxerre, Roissy-En-Brie, France. Koenraad I was a Count of Aargouw. He died in 843, aged about 43, in Abbey of Saint-Germanus Van Auxerre, Auxerre, France.

3628. ADELHEID VAN TOURS (Howard Charles's thirty-six-times-great-grandmother[3626], see Maternal Ancestry(175) Charlemagne 2 April 742 – 28 January 814), also known as Charles the Great (Latin: Carolus or Karolus Magnus) or Charles I (Frankish: *Karl), was King of the Franks. He united a large part of Europe during the early Middle Ages and laid the foundations for modern France, Germany and the Low Countries. He took the Frankish throne in 768 and became King of Italy in 774. From 800, he became the first Holy Roman Emperor—the first recognised emperor in Western Europe since the fall of the Western Roman Empire three centuries earlier. Charlemagne already ruled his kingdom without the help of the Pope, but recognition from the pontiff granted him divine legitimacy in the eyes of his contemporaries. The expanded Frankish state which Charlemagne founded was called the Carolingian Empire.

Charlemagne was the oldest son of Pepin the Short and Bertrada of Laon. He became king in 768 following the death of his father, initially as co-ruler with his brother Carloman I. Carloman's sudden death in 771 under unexplained circumstances left Charlemagne as the undisputed ruler of the Frankish Kingdom. Charlemagne continued his father's policy towards the papacy and became its protector, removing the Lombards from power in northern Italy, and leading an incursion into Muslim Spain. He also campaigned against the Saxons to his east, Christianising them upon penalty of death, leading to events such as the Massacre of Verden. Charlemagne reached the height of his power in 800 when he was crowned Emperor of the Romans by Pope Leo III on Christmas Day at Old St. Peter's Basilica.

Charlemagne has been called the "Father of Europe" (Pater Europae),[3] as he united most of Western Europe for the first time since the Roman Empire. His rule spurred the Carolingian Renaissance, a period of energetic cultural and intellectual activity within the Western Church. All Holy Roman Emperors up to the last Emperor Francis II, as well as both the French and German monarchies, considered their kingdoms to be descendants of Charlemagne's empire. However, the Eastern Orthodox Church views Charlemagne more controversially, labelling as heterodox his support of the filioque and recognition by the Bishop of Rome as legitimate Roman Emperor rather than Irene of Athens of the Eastern Roman Empire. These were but two of the machinations that led to the eventual split of Rome and Constantinople in the Great Schism of 1054.

Charlemagne died in 814, having ruled as emperor for just over thirteen years. He was laid to rest in his imperial capital of Aachen in what is today Germany. His son Louis the Pious succeeded him.

3630. FASTRADA OF THE FRANKS (Howard Charles's thirty-six-times-great-grandmother[3628], see Maternal Ancestry(135) and Maternal Ancestry(151)) was born in 765, in Ingelheim. She died on 10 August 794, aged about 29. She was buried in St. Albans' Abbey, Mainz.

Fastrada was born circa 765 at Ingelheim, the daughter of the powerful East Frankish Count Rudolph (also called Eadolf, and his wife, Aeda. Fastrada became the third wife of Charlemagne, marrying him in October 783 at Worms, Germany, a few months after Queen Hildegard’s death. A probable reason behind the marriage was to solidify a Frankish alliance east of the Rhine when Charles was still fighting the Saxons.

Due to her influence, Charlemagne's son by Himiltrude, Pepin the Hunchback, was publicly tounsured after an attempted rebellion against his father. During their marriage, Charlemagne's fair ruling greatly declined. She was greatly despised by all of the other children. Fastrada died on 10 August 794 in Frankfurt (in present-day Germany), during the synod of Frankfurt and was buried in St. Albans' Abbey, Mainz, long before the abbey was finished. Due to Archbishop Richulf's influence, she was not buried in the Basilique Saint-Denis, the burial site of almost all the Frankish and French monarchs, nor St. Arnulf's.
Abbey near Metz. After the destruction of St. Alban's Abbey in 1552, her tombstone was transferred to Mainz Cathedral, where it can be seen today in the wall of the southern nave. Charlemagne Martel[3629], aged about 41, married Fastrada of The Franks, aged about 18, in 783 in Worms, Germany. They had one daughter:

Theodrada of The Carolingians[3588] born in 784; died in 844

3631. IVAR HALFDANSSON (Howard Charles's thirty-six-times-great-grandfather[3629], see Maternal Ancestry(136), Maternal Ancestry(152) and Maternal Ancestry(252)) was born in 780, in Oppland, Norway, to Halfdan The Aged And Stingy Eysteinsson[3664] and Hlif Dagsdottir[3665]. Ivar was an Earl of Oppland (Viking). He died in 824, aged about 44, in Maer, Trondelag, Norway.

3632. THYRA EYSTEINSDOTTIR (Howard Charles's thirty-six-times-great-grandmother[3630], see Maternal Ancestry(136), Maternal Ancestry(152) and Maternal Ancestry(252)) was born in 785, in Trondeim, Norway. She died in 850, aged about 65, in Oppland, Norway. Ivar Halfdansson[3631] married Thyra Eysteinsdottir. They had one son:

Eystein Glumara Ivarsson[3589] born in 800 in Maer, Nord Trondelag, Norway; died in 872 in Oppland, Norway

3633. LOUIS I (THE PIOUS) DE FRANCE (Howard Charles's thirty-six-times-great-grandfather[3631], see Maternal Ancestry(137), Maternal Ancestry(153), Maternal Ancestry(193), Maternal Ancestry(212), Maternal Ancestry(217), Maternal Ancestry(235), Maternal Ancestry(240) and Maternal Ancestry(260)) was born on 1 April 778, in Cassinogilum, Chasseeuil, Poitiers, France, to Charlemagne Martel[3629] and Hildegarde de Vinzgau[3666]. Louis I (The Pious) became known as ‘The Pious’. The Pious was an Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire. He died on 20 June 840, aged 62, in Ingelheim, Mainz-Bingen, Rheinland-Pfalz, Germany. He was buried in St. Pierre aux Nonnains Basilica, Metz, Germany. Louis I (The Pious) de France married Ermengarde van Haspengau[3602]. They had one son:

Lothair de France[3560] born in 795 in Altdorf bei Nürnberg, Bayern, Germany; died on 29 September 855 in Prüm, (Present Eifelkreis Bitburg-Prüm), (Present Rheinland-Pfalz), Frankish Empire, Germany

3634. JUDITH VON BAVARIA (Howard Charles's thirty-six-times-great-grandmother[3632], see Maternal Ancestry(137) and Maternal Ancestry(153)) was born in 800, in Altdorf, Eichstatt, Bayern, Germany. She died on 19 April 843, aged about 42, in Tours, Indre-et-Loire, France. Louis I (The Pious) de France[3633] married Judith von Bavaria. They had one son:

Charles The Bald Carolingian[3591] born in 823 in Frankfurt, Germany; died in 877 in Pass at Mont Cenis, Brides-les-Bains, Trois Vallées, Savoie, Kingdom of France

3635. ETHELWULF OF WESSEX (Howard Charles's thirty-six-times-great-grandfather[3633], see Maternal Ancestry(137) and Maternal Ancestry(153)) was born in 806, in Wessex, England. He died in 857, aged about 51. He was buried in Stamridge, England.

Louis the Pious (778 – 20 June 840), also called the Fair, and the Debonaire,[1] was the King of Aquitaine from 781. He was also King of the Franks and co-Emperor (as Louis I) with his father, Charlemagne, of the Holy Roman Empire from 813. As the only surviving adult son of Charlemagne and Hildegarde, he became the sole ruler of the Franks after his father’s death in 814, a position which he held until his death, save for the period 833–34, during which he was deposed.

During his reign in Aquitaine, Louis was charged with the defence of the empire's southwestern frontier. He conquered Barcelona from the Muslims in 801 and asserted Frankish authority over Pamplona and the Basques south of the Pyrenees in 812. As emperor he included his adult sons, Lothair, Pepin, and Louis, in the government and sought to establish a suitable division of the realm among them. The first decade of his reign was characterised by several tragedies and embarrassments, notably the brutal treatment of his nephew Bernard of Italy, for which Louis atoned in a public act of self-debasement.

In the 830s his empire was torn by civil war between his sons, only exacerbated by Louis’s attempts to include his son Charles by his second wife in the succession plans. Though his reign ended on a high note, with order largely restored to his empire, it was followed by three years of civil war. Louis is generally compared unfavourably to his father, though the problems he faced were of a distinctly different sort.

Louis I (The Pious) de France married Ermengarde van Haspengau[3602]. They had one son:

Lothair de France[3560] born in 795 in Altdorf bei Nürnberg, Bayern, Germany; died on 29 September 855 in Prüm, (Present Eifelkreis Bitburg-Prüm), (Present Rheinland-Pfalz), Frankish Empire, Germany

3636. OSSBURGA ? (Howard Charles's thirty-six-times-great-grandmother[3634], see Maternal Ancestry(137) and Maternal Ancestry(153)) was born in 820, in Wessex, England. She died in 852, aged about 32, in Wessex, England.

Ethelwulf of Wessex[3635] married Ossburga ?. They had one son: Ethelred Mucel of The Gaini[3595] born in 836

3637. PÉPIN CARLOMAN OF LOMBARDY (Howard Charles's thirty-six-times-great-grandfather[3635], see Maternal Ancestry(138), Maternal Ancestry(152) and Maternal Ancestry(154)) was born in 773, in Aachen, Nordrhein-Westfalen, Germany, to Charlemagne Martel[3629] and Hildegarde de Vinzgau[3666]. Pépin Carlowman was a King of the Lombards. He died on 8 July 810, aged about 37, in Milan, Italy. He was buried in Basilica di San Zeno Maggiore, Verona, Italy.

Pepin or Pippin (or Pepin Carlowman, Pepinno, April 773 – 8 July 810), born Carlowman, was the son of Charlemagne and King of the Lombards (781–810) under the authority of his father. Pepin was the second son of Charlemagne by his then-wife Hildegarde. He was born Carlowman, but was rechristened with the royal name Pepin (also the name of his older half-brother Pepin the Hunchback, and his grandfather Pepin the Short) when he was a young child. He was made "king of Italy" after his father's conquest of the Lombards, in 781, and crowned by Pope Hadrian I with the Iron Crown of Lombardy. He was active as ruler of Lombardy and worked to expand the Frankish empire. In 791, he marched a Lombard army into the Drava valley and ravaged Pannonia, while his father marched along the Danube into Avar territory. Charlemagne left the campaigning to deal with a Saxon revolt in 792. Pepin and Duke Eric of Friuli continued, however, to assault the Avars' ring-shaped strongholds. The great Ring of the Avars, their capital fortress, was taken twice. The booty was sent to Charlemagne in Aachen and redistributed to all his followers and even to foreign rulers, including King Offa of Mercia. A celebratory poem, De Pippini regis Victoria Avarica, was composed after Pepin forced the Avar khagan to submit in 796. This poem was composed at Verona, Pepin's capital after 799 and the centre of Carolingian Renaissance literature in Italy. The Versus de Verona (c. 800), an urban encomium of the city, likewise praises king Pepin. The "Codex Gothanus" History of the Lombards hails Pepin's campaign against Benevento and his liberation of Corsica "from the oppression of the Moors."

His activities included a long, but unsuccessful siege of Venice in 810. The siege lasted six months and Pepin's army was ravaged by the diseases of the local swamps and was forced to withdraw. A few months later Pepin died.

He had one or more mistresses, whose names are not known for certain, and whose ancestry is not given from any reliable source although one has been conjectured to have been called Bertha, and she is believed to be the daughter of William of Gellone, count of Toulouse. Pepin had one son and five daughters (they were: Adelaide, married Lambert I of Nantes; Atala; Gundrada; Bertha; and Tetradra), all of whom but the eldest were born between 800 and Pepin's death and died before their grandfather's death in 814. Pepin's son was Bernard. Pepin was expected to inherit a third of his father's empire, but he predeceased him. The Lombard crown passed on to his illegitimate son Bernard, but the empire went to Pepin's younger brother Louis the Pious.

3638. BERTHA DE TOULOUSE (Howard Charles's thirty-six-times-great-grandmother[3636], see Maternal Ancestry(138), Maternal Ancestry(152) and Maternal Ancestry(154)) was born in 777, in Aachen, Nordrhein-Westfalen, Germany. Bertha was a Queen of the Lombards. She died in 871, aged about 94, in Milan, Italy. She was buried.

Pépin Carlowman of Lombardy[3637] married Bertha de Toulouse. They had one son: Bernardo of Lombardy[3597] born in 797 in Vermandois, Picardy; died in 818 in Milan, Lombardy 3639. HERBERT DE TOULOUSE (Howard Charles's thirty-six-times-great-grandfather[3637], see Maternal Ancestry(138), Maternal Ancestry(152) and Maternal Ancestry(154)) was born in 780 to William of Gellone[3667] and Waltrada Welf[3668]. He died in 843, aged about 63.

3640. GUIBOAR VON HORNBACK (Howard Charles's thirty-six-times-great-grandmother[3638], see Maternal Ancestry(138), Maternal Ancestry(152) and Maternal Ancestry(154)) was born in 785. She died in 804, aged about 19.
Herbert de Toulouse married Guiboar von Hornbach. They had one daughter:
Cunégonde de Toulouse born in 797 in Bohain-En-Vermandois, Aisne, Picardie, France; died on 15 June 836 in Milan, Milano, Lombardia, Italia

3641. BERNARD DE SAINT QUENTIN (Howard Charles's thirty-six-times-great-grandfather, see Maternal Ancestry(138), Maternal Ancestry(152) and Maternal Ancestry(154)) was born in 720, in Saint Quentin, Nord, Nord-Pas-de-Calais, France, to Charles (Karl) Martel and Ruodhaid of Treves. Bernard was an Abbot of Saint Quentin. He died in 807, aged about 87, in Laon, Aisne, Picardie, France.

Bernard or Bernhard Bernard de Saint Quentin (d'Herstal), Abbot of St. Quentin (c.720-787) was a son of Charles Martel by his mistress Ruodhaid. He was thus a half Brother of the Frankish King Pepin the Short, and Uncle to the First Emperor in Western Europe since Romulus Augustulus in 476, Charlemagne. He is an obscure figure, rising out of the mists only to lead half of the Frankish army in his nephew Charlemagne's Lombard campaign. While Charlemagne led his contingent through the pass of Moncenisio, Bernard led his through the Great St. Bernard Pass.

He is known to have had two sons by "unknown' daughter of Claribert I de Laon. Bernard was prominent in the reign of Charlemagne's son Louis the Pious:
Adalard, became a steward of Louis the Pious
Wala (d. 835), became the chief advisor of Lothair I in his rebellions

Ingeltrude, a daughter who was the mistress of King Pippin of Italy and by whom she had King Bernard of Italy.

3642. MLLE V DE LAON (Howard Charles's thirty-six-times-great-grandmother, see Maternal Ancestry(138), Maternal Ancestry(152) and Maternal Ancestry(154)) was born in 722, in Laon, Aisne, Picardy, France. She died in 800, aged about 78, in Picardy, France.

Bernard de Saint Quentin married Mlle V de Laon. They had one son:
Wala de Bobbio born in 754 in Vermandois, Picardie, France; died on 31 August 836 in Abbey De Bobbio, Piacenza, Emilia-Romagna, Italy

3643. GUILLAUME (THE HOLY) DE TOULOUSE (Howard Charles's thirty-six-times-great-grandfather, see Maternal Ancestry(138), Maternal Ancestry(152) and Maternal Ancestry(154)) was born in 751, in Toulouse, Jura, Franche-Comte, France. Guillaume (The Holy) was a Count of Toulouse. He died in 812, aged about 61. He was buried in Abbey of Gelone, Saint-Guilhelm-le-desert, France.

3644. GERBERGA VAN HORNBACH (Howard Charles's thirty-six-times-great-grandmother, see Maternal Ancestry(138), Maternal Ancestry(152) and Maternal Ancestry(154)) was born in 760. She died in 785, aged about 25.

Guillaume (The Holy) de Toulouse married Gerberga van Hornbach. They had one daughter:
Rotilde de Toulouse born in 785 in Vaux-en-Vermandois, Aisne, Picardy, France; died in 820 in Vaux-en-Vermandois / Aisne/ Picardy, France

Liufrid, was the Duke of Alsace, the third in a line of Etichonid dukes dating back to circa 670. He succeeded his father Adalbert in 723. In the 720s he made his younger brother Eberhard count of the Sundgau. He made his court at Strasbourg, where he patronised the monastery of Weissenburg in seven separate donations between 734 and his death. Liufrid was on good terms with the bishop of Strasbourg, Heddo, a partisan of Charles Martel. Liufrid was probably a supporter of Martel in his wars with the Alemanni across the Rhine. He disappears from the records in 742, along with his son Hildfrid, and presumably they died fighting for the Carolingians, for their last charter is dated to the first year of the reign of Carloman, son of Charles Martel. No duke was appointed to succeed the heirless Liufrid. He had two wives, probably both Alsatian: Hilfrudis (Hilfrude) and Theutila.

3655. CARLOMAN CAROLINGIAN (Howard Charles's thirty-seven-times-great-grandfather[3653], see Maternal Ancestry(228), Maternal Ancestry(243) and Maternal Ancestry(254)) was born in 710, in Liège, Liege, Belgium, to Charles (Karl) Martel[3669] and Chrotrudis de Treves[3677]. Carloman was a Mayor of the Palace. He died on 17 August 754, aged about 44, in Cassino, Frosinone, Lazio, Italy.

Carloman (between 706 and 716[1] – 17 August 754) was the eldest son of Charles Martel, majordomo or mayor of the palace of the Franks, and his wife Chrotrud of Treves. On Charles's death (741), Carloman and his brother Pepin the Short succeeded to their father's legal positions, Caraloman in Austrasia, and Pepin in Neustria. He was a member of the family later called the Carolingians and it can be argued that he was instrumental in consolidating their power at the expense of the ruling Merovingian kings of the Franks. He withdrew from public life in 747 to take up the monastic habit, "the first of a new type of saintly king," according to Norman Cantor, "more interested in religious devotion than royal power, who frequently appeared in the following three centuries and who was an indication of the growing impact of Christian piety on Germanic society".

On 15 August 747, Carloman renounced his position as majordomo and withdrew to a monastic life, being tonsured in Rome by Pope Zachary. All sources from the period indicate that Carloman's renunciation of the world was volitional, although some have speculated that he went to Rome for other, unspecified reasons and was "encouraged" to remain in Rome by the pope, acting on a request from Pepin to keep Carloman in Italy.

Carloman founded a monastery on Monte Soratte and then went to Monte Cassino. All sources from the period indicate that he believed his calling was the Church. He withdrew to Monte Cassino and spent most of the remainder of his life there, presumably in meditation and prayer. His son, Drogo, demanded from Pepin the Short his father's share of the family patrimony, but was swiftly neutralised.

Seven years after Carloman's retirement and on the eve of his death, he once more stepped briefly on the public stage. In 754, Pope Stephen II had begged Pepin, now king, to come to his aid against the king of the Lombards, Aistulf. Carloman left Monte Cassino to visit his brother to ask him not to march on Italy (and possibly to drum up support for his son Drogo). Pippin was unmoved, and imprisoned Carloman in Vienne, where he died on 17 August. He was buried in Monte Cassino.

3656. CHAROTRUDE DE TREVES (Howard Charles's thirty-seven-times-great-grandmother[3654], see Maternal Ancestry(228), Maternal Ancestry(243) and Maternal Ancestry(254)) was born in 690, in Treves, Rhone, France, to Leutwinus de Treves[3675] and Willigarde de Bavaria[3676]. Charotruade was a Queen of the Franks. She died in 724, aged about 34, in Limoges, Seine-et-Marne, France.

Carloman Carolingian[3655] married Charotruade de Treves. They had one daughter:
Rotrude de Austrasia[3614] born in 740 in Spoleto, Perugia, Umbria, Italy; died in 772 in Brosse, Seine-et-Marne, Ile-de-France, France
3657. REGINA REGINOPYCRHA (Howard Charles's thirty-seven-times-great-grandmother[3655], see Maternal Ancestry(224), Maternal Ancestry(231), Maternal Ancestry(244) and Maternal Ancestry(255)) was born in 770, in Aachen, Rhineland, Prussia. Regina was a Mistress of Charlemagne. She died on 7 June 844, aged about 73, in Aachen, Nordrhein-Westfalen, Germany.

His fourth known concubine was Regina. By her he had:
Drogo (801–855), Bishop of Metz from 823 and abbot of Luxeuil Abbey
Hugh (802–844), archchancellor of the Empire.

Regina was the partner of her indirect relation, Charlemagne Martel[3629].

Charlemagne Martel[3629] was not married to Regina Reginopycrha. They had one son:
Hugo de Noaille de Saint-Bertin[3619] born in 802 in Aachen, Nordrhein-Westfalen, Germany; died on 14 June 844 in Aachen, Nordrhein-Westfalen

Pepin the Short (German: Pippin der Kleine, French: Pépin le Bref, c. 714 – 24 September 768) was the King of the Franks from 751 until his death. He was the first of the Carolingians to become king.

The younger son of the Frankish prince Charles Martel and his wife Rotrude, Pepin's upbringing was distinguished by the ecclesiastical education he had received from the monks of St. Denis. Succeeding his father as the Mayor of the Palace in 741, Pepin reigned over Francia jointly with his elder brother Carloman. Pepin ruled in Neustria, Burgundy, and Provence, while his brother Carloman established himself in Austrasia, Alemannia and Thuringia. The brothers were active in subjugating revolts led by the Bavarians, Aquitanians, Saxons, and the Alemanni in the early years of their reign. In 743, they ended the Frankish interregnum by choosing Childeric III, who was to be the last Merovingian monarch, as figurehead king of the Franks.
Being well disposed towards the church and Papacy on account of their ecclesiastical upbringing, Pepin and Carloman continued their father's work in supporting Saint Boniface in reforming the Frankish church, and evangelising the Saxons. After Carloman, who was an intensely pious man, retired to religious life in 747, Pepin became the sole ruler of the Franks. He suppressed a revolt led by his half-brother Grifo, and succeeded in becoming the undisputed master of all Francia. Giving up pretense, Pepin then forced Childeric into a monastery and had himself proclaimed king of the Franks with support of Pope Zachary in 751. The decision was not supported by all members of the Carolingian family and Pepin had to put down a revolt led by Carloman's son, Drog, and again by Grifo.

As King, Pepin embarked on an ambitious program to expand his power. He reformed the legislation of the Franks and continued the ecclesiastical reforms of Boniface. Pepin also intervened in favour of the Papacy of Stephen II against the Lombards in Italy. He was able to secure several cities, which he then gave to the Pope as part of the Donation of Pepin. This formed the legal basis for the Papal States in the Middle Ages. The Byzantines, keen to make good relations with the growing power of the Frankish empire, gave Pepin the title of Patricius. In wars of expansion, Pepin conquered Septimania from the Islamic Umayyads, and subdued the southern realms by repeatedly defeating Waifer of Aquitaine and his Basque troops, after which the Basque and Aquitanian lords saw no option but to pledge loyalty to the Franks. Pepin was, however, troubled by the relentless revolts of the Saxons and the Bavarians. He campaigned tirelessly in Germany, but the final subjugation of these tribes was left to his successors.

Pepin died in 768 and was succeeded by his sons Charlemagne and Carloman. Although unquestionably one of the most powerful and successful rulers of his time, Pepin's reign is largely overshadowed by that of his more famous son.

3663. BERTHA DE LAON (Howard Charles's thirty-seven-times-great-grandmother[3662], see Maternal Ancestry(135), Maternal Ancestry(151), Maternal Ancestry(152), Maternal Ancestry(153), Maternal Ancestry(154) and Maternal Ancestry(156)) was born in 720, in Laon, Aisne, France, to Charibert de Laon[3678] and Bertrade Merovingia[3679]. Bertha was a Queen of the Franks. She died on 12 July 783, aged about 63, in Choisy, Haute-Savoie, Rhone-Alpes, France. She was buried in St. Denis Cathedral, Paris, Ile-de-France, France.

In 751, Pepin and Bertrada became King and Queen of the Franks, following Pepin's successful coup against the Frankish Merovingian monarchs. Pepin was crowned in June 754, and Bertrada, Charlemagne, and Carloman were blessed by Pope Stephen II.

After Pepin's death in 768, Bertrada lost her title as Queen of the Franks. Charlemagne and Carloman inherited the two halves of Pepin's kingdom. Bertrada stayed at the court and often tried to stop arguments between the two brothers. Some historians credit Bertrada's support for her elder son Charlemagne over her younger son Carloman, and her diplomatic skills, for Charlemagne's early success. Although her influence over Charlemagne may have diminished in time, she lived at his court, and, according to Einhard, their relationship was excellent.

Bertrada recommended that Charlemagne set aside his legal wife, Himiltrude, and marry Desiderata, a daughter of the Lombard king Desiderius, but Charlemagne soon divorced Desiderata. Einhard claims this was the only episode that ever strained relations between mother and son. Bertrada retired from the court after Carloman's death in 771 to live in Choisy-au-Bac, where Charlemagne had set aside a royal house for her. Choisy-au-Bac was favorable because of its history of being the home and burial place of several Merovingian kings.

Bertrada died on 12 July 783 in Choisy-au-Bac. Charlemagne buried her in the Basilica of St Denis near Pepin.

Bertrada inspired Adenes Le Roi to write the trouvere Li rouman de Berte aus grands piés in 1270. Adenes referred to her as "Bertha Broadfoot", the earliest known usage of that nickname.

Bertrada is also referred to as "Bertha Broadfoot" in François Villon's 15th-century poem Ballade des dames du temps jadis.

Pepin III Martel[3662] married Bertha de Laon. They had one son:

It is unknown if Charlemagne planned his marriage before the sudden death of Carloman or was just a part of the purposeful incorporation of his younger brother's Kingdom, in detriment of the claims of his nephews. In any event, the wedding between Charlemagne and Hildegarde took place at Aix-la-Chapelle certainly before 30 April 771, after the repudiation of the Lombardian princess Desiderata, Charlemagne's previous wife. As no exact date of birth of Hildegarde was recorded, it was assumed that at the time of her wedding she could be around 17 years old, giving her a birthdate of 754. A marriage at this age is not unusual for that time, since the age of marriage was set at puberty. In Roman law, which was very well received by the Church, the minimum age for marriage for girls of 12 years has been established.

An intense physical relationship between the spouses was demonstrated by the fact that, during her 12 years of marriage, Hildegarde had 8 pregnancies (including one set of twins) and remarkably chronicles never mentioned either miscarriages or stillbirths. She accompanied Charlemagne on many of his military campaigns: she gave birth to her second child and first daughter, Adelaide, during the siege of Pavia, capital of the Kingdom of the Lombards (September 773/June 774), but the child died during the return journey to France. In 778, Hildegarde accompanied her husband as far as Aquitaine, where she gave birth the twins Louis and Lothair.[9] In 780/781 she traveled with Charlemagne and four of their children to Rome, where the sons Louis and Carloman (renamed Pepin after his baptism by Pope Adrian I) were appointed sub-kings of Aquitaine and Italy, respectively. This contributed to the strengthening of the alliance between the Carolingians and the Papacy. Because of her frequent pregnancies, it can be presumed that Hildegarde accompanied her husband on further campaigns, at least temporarily. Hildegarde died on 30 April 783, according to Paul the Deacon, from the after effects of her last childbirth. She was buried on 1 May in the Abbey of Saint-Arnould in Metz. Following the wishes of Charlemagne, near her grave were burning candles and daily prayers were said for her soul.

Hildegarde married her indirect relation, Charlemagne Martel[3629].

Charlemagne Martel[3629], aged 29, married Hildegarde de Vinzgau, aged about 13, on 30 April 771 in Aachen, Nordrhein-Westfalen, Germany. They had two sons:

Pepin Carloman of Lombardy[3637] born in 773 in Aachen, Nordrhein-Westfalen, Germany; died on 8 July 810 in Milan, Italy

Louis I (The Pious) de France[3633] born on 1 April 778 in Cassinogilum, Chasseuil, Poitiers, France; died on 20 June 840 in Ingelheim, Mainz-Bingen, Rheinland-Pfalz, Germany

3667. WILLIAM OF GELLONE (Howard Charles's thirty-seven-times-great-grandfather[3666], see Maternal Ancestry(152), Maternal Ancestry(154) and Maternal Ancestry(157)) was born in 755, in Toulouse, Languedoc-Roussillon, France, to Thierry D'Autun[3684] and Auda Martel[3685]. William was a Saint and Duke of Toulouse. He died on 28 May 812, aged about 56, in Abbey in Gellone (now Saint-Guilhem-le-Désert) near Lodève in the diocese of Maguelonne.
William of Gellone (c. 755 – 28 May 812 or 814 AD), sometimes called William of Orange, was the second Duke of Toulouse from 790 until 811. In 804, he founded the abbey of Gellone. He was canonized a saint in 1066 by Pope Alexander II.

In the tenth or eleventh century, a Latin hagiography, the Vita sancti Willelmi, was composed based on oral traditions. By the twelfth century, William's legend had grown. He is the hero of an entire cycle of chansons de geste, the earliest of which is the Chanson de Guillaume of about 1140. In the chansons, he is nicknamed Fièrebrace (wild arm) on account of his strength and the marquis au court nez (margrave with the short nose) on account of an injury suffered in battle with a giant.

William was born in northern France in the mid-8th century. He was a cousin of Charlemagne (his mother Aldana was daughter of Charles Martel) and the son of Thierry IV, Count of Autun. As a kinsman and trusted comes, he spent his youth in the court of Charlemagne. In 788, Chorso, Count of Toulouse, was captured by the Basque Adalric, and made to swear an oath of allegiance to the Duke of Gascony, Lupus II. Upon his release Charlemagne replaced him with his Frankish cousin William (790). William in turn successfully subdued the Gascons.

In 793, Hisham I, the successor of Abd ar-Rahman I, proclaimed a holy war against the Christians to the north. He amassed an army of 100,000 men, half of which attacked the Kingdom of Asturias while the other half invaded Languedoc, penetrating as far as Narbonne.

William met this force and defeated them. He met the Muslim forces again near the river Orbis at Villedaigene but was defeated, though his obstinate resistance exhausted the Muslim forces so much that they retreated to Spain. In 801, William commanded along with Louis King of Aquitaine a large expedition of Franks, Burgundians, Provençals, Aquitanians, Gascons (Basques) and Goths that captured Barcelona from the Moors.

In 804, he founded the abbey in Gellone (now Saint-Guilhem-le-Désert) near Lodève in the diocese of Maguelonne. He granted property to Gellone and placed the monastery under the general control of Benedict of Aniane, whose monastery was nearby. Among his gifts to the abbey he founded was a piece of the True Cross, a present from his cousin Charlemagne. Charlemagne had received the relic from the Patriarch of Jerusalem according to the Vita of William.

In 806, William retired to Gellone as a monk and eventually died there on 28 May 812 (or 814). When he died, it was said the bells at Orange rang on their own accord.

Charles Martel (c. 688 – 22 October 741) was a Frankish statesman and military leader who, as Duke and Prince of the Franks and Mayor of the Palace, was de facto ruler of Francia from 718 until his death. The son of the Frankish statesman Pepin of Herstal and a noblewoman named Alpaida, Charles successfully asserted his claims to power as successor to his father as the power behind the throne in Frankish politics. Continuing and building on his father's work, he restored centralized government in Francia and began the series of military campaigns that re-established the Franks as the undisputed masters of all Gaul.

After work to establish a unity in Gaul, Charles' attention was called to foreign conflicts, and dealing with the Islamic advance into Western Europe was a foremost concern. Arab and Berber Islamic forces had conquered Spain (711), crossed the Pyrenees (720), seized a major dependency of the Visigoths (721–725),[7] and after intermittent challenges, under Abdul Rahman Al Ghafiqi, the Arab Governor of al-Andalus, advanced toward Gaul and on Tours, "the holy town of Gaul"; in October 732, the army of the...
Umayyad Caliphate led by Al Ghafiqi met Frankish and Burgundian forces under Charles in an area between the cities of Tours and Poitiers (modern north-central France[8]), leading to a decisive, historically important Frankish victory known as the Battle of Tours (or ma’arākāt Balāṭ ash-Shuhadā, Battle of the Palace of Martyrs), ending the "last of the great Arab invasions of France," a military victory termed "brilliant" on the part of Charles.

Charles further took the offensive after Tours, destroying fortresses at Agde, Béziers and Maguelonne, and engaging Islamic forces at Nîmes, though ultimately failing to recover Narbonne (737) or to fully reclaim the Visigoth's Narbonensis.[9] He thereafter made significant further external gains against fellow Christian realms, establishing Frankish control over Bavaria, Alemannia, and Frisia, and compelling some of the Saxon tribes to offer tribute (738).

Apart from the military endeavours, Charles is considered to be a founding figure of the European Middle Ages. Skilled as an administrator as well as a warrior, he is credited with a seminal role in the emerging responsibilities of the knights of courts, and so in the development of the Frankish system of feudalism. Moreover, Charles—a great patron of Saint Boniface—made the first attempt at reconciliation between the Franks and the Papacy.[citation needed] Pope Gregory III, whose realm was being menaced by the Lombards, wished Charles to become the defender of the Holy See and offered him the Roman consulship, though Charles declined.

He divided Francia between his sons Carloman and Pepin. The latter became the first of the Carolingians. Charles' grandson, Charlemagne, extended the Frankish realms to include much of the West, and became the first Emperor in the West since the fall of Rome.

Saint Leudwinus, Count of Treves (Leodewin, Liutwin, Ludwin) (c. 660 - † 29. September, 722 in Reims) founded an abbey in Mettlach. He was Archbishop of Treves and Laon. As patron saint of the Mettlach parish, his relics are carried through the town by procession at the annual Pentecost celebration. His feast day is September 23. He was the son of Saint Warinus, the paternal grandson of Saint Sigrada, and nephew of Saint Leodegarius. Leudwinus was born a French nobleman and was a member of one of the most powerful clans in Austrasia. His father, Warinus, was Count of Poitiers and Gunza of Metz. Lambert of Maastricht was his kinsman. His Frankish name is Liutwin. Leudwinus spent his early life at the royal court of Austrasia and was styled Count of Treves. He received his education from his maternal uncle, Saint Basinus, Archbishop of Treves. In 697, Leudwinus signed the Deed of Echternach with his uncle.

Leudwinus died on the 29th of September 722 at Reims.[3] He was succeeded as Archbishop of Treve by his son, Milo, who brought his father's remains to Treve for burial. However, local customs prevented this, so Leudwinus' family decided to let the dead saint choose his own place of burial. His coffin was placed on a ship without a crew. It sailed by itself first to Moselle, then Saar, and finally docked at Mettlach, where the church bells began to ring. Leudwinus was buried in St. Mary's Church at the Abbey at Mettlach. In 990, St. Mary's Church was replaced by a new structure called the Old Tower, the oldest preserved stone building in Saar.

In 1247, Leudwinus' relics were transferred to the newly constructed Leudwinus Chapel (Liutwinuskapelle). Some 200 years later, his remains were reburied again in a new chapel connected to the abbey church. During the French Revolution, the monastery was purchased by the Boch family, who had the building demolished and built Liutwinus Cathedral in Mettlach, where the relics of the saint are located today. Reports of miracles at Leudwinus' grave in Mettlach have made it a popular pilgrimage site over the centuries.

Charibert (also spelled Caribert and Heribert), Count of Laon, was the maternal grandfather of Charlemagne. He was the father of Charles's mother, Bertrada of Laon. Only his mother is known from contemporary records. In 721, Charibert signed, with his mother Bertrada of Prüm the foundation act of the Abbey of Prüm. The same year, also with his mother, he made a donation to the Abbey of Echternach. By 744, his daughter Bertrada of Laon had married Pippin the Younger, mayor of the palace of Neustria and Burgundy and later king of the Franks. He died before 762, as stated in an act of his daughter and son-in-law.

3679. BERTRADE MEROVINGIA (Howard Charles's thirty-eight-times-great-grandmother[3678], see Maternal Ancestry(135), Maternal Ancestry(151), Maternal Ancestry(153), Maternal Ancestry(154), Maternal Ancestry(156) and Maternal Ancestry(198)) was born in 694, in Laon, Aisne, Pays de la Loire, France. Bertrada Merovingia, aged about 29, married Bertrade Merovingia, aged about 25, in 719. They had one daughter:

Bertha de Laon[3663] born in 720 in Laon, Aisne, France; died on 12 July 783 in Choisy, Haute-Savoie, Rhone-Alpes, France

Alemanni, the Frisians, and the Franconians. He also began the process of evangelisation of Germany. Pepin's statesmanship was notable for the further diminution of Merovingian royal authority, and for the acceptance of the undisputed right to rule for his family. Therefore, Pepin was able to name as heir, his grandson, Theudoald. But, this was not accepted by his powerful son, Charles Martel, leading to a civil war after his death in which the latter emerged victorious.

3689. ALPAIDA VON SASCHEN (Howard Charles's thirty-eight-times-great-grandmother[3688], see Maternal Ancestry(152), Maternal Ancestry(154) and Maternal Ancestry(158)) was born in 654, in Heristal, Liege, Nuestria, Belgium, to Hugobert von Ecternach[3706] and Adele de Poitiers[3707]. Alpaida was a Duchess of the Franks. She died in 705, aged about 51, in Brabent, Vosges, Lorraine, France.

Pepin II of Heristal[3688] married Alpaida von Saschen. They had one son:

Chrodbert (also known as Chrodbert II or Robert II to distinguish him from his great-uncle known sometimes as Chrodbert I) (d. after 678) was a nobleman from Neustria. He was grandson to Chrodbert I, referendary to Clovis II through his son Charibert de Haspengau (555-636). Chrodbert was Lord Chancellor[citation needed] during the reign of Chlothar III, King of the Franks in Neustria, as well as referendary. He was a contemporary of Ansbert of Rouen, who was also a Lord Chancellor[citation needed] to Clotaire III. Chrodbert was mentioned as Count palatine (comes palatines) on 2 October 678. He was at the court of Clovis II in 654 and opposed Erchinoald, Mayor of the Palace, to little avail. He supported Ebiron against Leodegar, who had the latter’s eyes put out. He became Count palatine and then chancellor to Clothar III.

Chrodbert married Théodrade (Théoda) and they had many children, some of which are likely their grandchildren
Charivius (Hervé), Nobleman of Hesbaye (some say Count of Laon), married to Irmina, daughter of Hugobert. Their son (name unknown) married Bertrada of Prüm, and therefore was a great-grandfather of Charlemagne.
Lambert, Count of Hesbaye
Rupert of Salzburg, Bishop of Worms
Chrotgar, Duke of Le Mans, whose son Charivius was an ancestor of the Rorgonids
Lambert, Bishop of Liège[citation needed]
Ragobert (d. 678)
Folchaïd, married Theodo of Bavaria.

3695. Theodrada van Poitiers (Howard Charles's thirty-nine-times-great-grandmother[3692], see Maternal Ancestry(254), Maternal Ancestry(283), Maternal Ancestry(285) and Maternal Ancestry(288)) was born in 645. Theodrada was a Countess of Haspengouw. She died on 15 September 677, aged about 32. She was buried in court of King Clovis.

Chrodobertus II van Haspengau[3694] married Theodrada van Poitiers. They had one son:
Lambert II van Haspengau[3673] born in 675 in Hesbaye, Belgium; died in 740

3696. Theuderik der Merovingen van Neustrië (Howard Charles's thirty-nine-times-great-grandfather[3693], see Maternal Ancestry(254), Maternal Ancestry(284), Maternal Ancestry(286) and Maternal Ancestry(289)) was born in 653 to Clovis II der Merovingen van Neustrië[3710] and Bathilde de Chelles[3711]. He died in 708, aged about 55.

3697. Clotildís van Metz (Howard Charles's thirty-nine-times-great-grandmother[3694], see Maternal Ancestry(254), Maternal Ancestry(284), Maternal Ancestry(286) and Maternal Ancestry(289)) was born in 650, in France, to Ansegisel van Austrasia[3712] and Begga van Austrasia[3713]. She died in 692, aged about 42, in Arras, France.

Warinus of Poitiers (s; d. 677 AD) was the Franco-Burgundian Count of Poitiers and Count of Paris and later Saint Warinus, Martyr of the Franks.[1][2][3] He was the son of Saint Sigrada of Sainte-Marie de Soissons and the brother of Saint Leodegarius. He was the father of Saint Leudwinus.

In 677 A.D., Warinus was stoned to death near Arras because of a feud between his brother Leodegarius and Ebroid, the Frankish Mayor of the Palace of Neustria.

Warinus was born in Autun, Saône-et-Loire, Burgundy.[1][4] He was the son of Bodilon, a Count of Poitiers and Sigreda of Alsace, and Sainte-Marie de Soissons.[1][4] He was the founder of the famous noble family of the Guideschi. As a nobleman, Warinus spent his childhood at the court of Clotaire

He married Gunza von Treves, a Frankish noblewoman in France. His wife came from an influential Frankish family and was the sister of Saint Basinus of Treves. They had three children:

Grimgert, Count of Paris (circa b.667 A.D.)

Ansegisel (also Ansige, Ansegus, or Anchises) (c. 602 or 610 – murdered before 679 or 662) was the son of Saint Arnulf, bishop of Metz, and his wife Doda. He served King Sigbert III of Austrasia (634–656) as a duke (Latin dux, a military leader) and domesticus. He was killed sometime before 679, slain in a feud by his enemy Gundewin. Through his son Pepin, Ansegisel's descendants would eventually become Frankish kings and rule over the Carolingian Empire.

He was married to Begga, the daughter of Pepin the Elder, sometime after 639. They had the following children:

- Pepin II (635 or 640 – December 16, 714), who would later become Mayor of the Palace of Austrasia
- Martin of Herstal
- Clotilda of Herstal (650–699), married King Theuderic III of Neustria.

3705. SAINT BEGGA OF ANDENNE (Howard Charles's thirty-nine-times-great-grandmother[3703], see Maternal Ancestry(154), Maternal Ancestry(158) and Maternal Ancestry(200)) was born in 615, in Austrasia, France, to Pepin of Landen[3720] and Itta of Metz[3721]. Begga was a Saint. She died on 17 December 693, aged about 78, in Saint Begga's Collegiate Church in Andenne. She was buried in Saint Begga's Collegiate Church in Andenne.

Saint Begga (also Begue, Begge) (615 – 17 December 693) was the daughter of Pepin of Landen, mayor of the palace of Austrasia, and his wife Itta of Metz. On the death of her husband, she took the veil, founded seven churches, and built a convent at Andenne on the Meuse River (Andenne sur Meuse) where she spent the rest of her days as abbess. She was buried in Saint Begga's Collegiate Church in Andenne.

The daughter of Pepin of Landen and his wife, Itta, Begga was the older sister of St Gertrude of Nivelles. She married Ansegisel, son of Arnulf, Bishop of Metz, and had three children:

- Pepin of Heristal, Martin of Laon, and Cloïtilda of Heristal, who married Theuderic III of the Franks. Ansegisel was killed sometime before 679, slain in a feud by his enemy Gundewin.
- Begga made a pilgrimage to Rome, and upon her return built seven churches at Andenne on the Meuse.

She is commemorated as a saint on her feast days, 6 September and 17 December. St Begga's feast day is 17 December according to "www.catholic.org".

Some hold that the Beguine movement which came to light in the 12th century was actually founded by St Begga; and the church in the beguinage of Lier, Belgium, has a statue of St Begga standing above the inscription: St. Begga, our foundress.

The Lier beguinage dates from the 13th century. More than likely, however, the Beguines derived their name from that of the priest Lambert le Bègue, under whose protection the witness and ministry of the Beguines flourished.

Ansegisel of Metz[3704] married Begga of Andenne. They had one son:

- Pepin II of Heristal[3688] born in 630 in Heristal, Liege, Nuestria, Belgium; died on 16 December 714 in Junille, Meuse, Lorraine, France

3711. BATHILDE DE CHELLES (Howard Charles's forty-times-great-grandmother[3709], see Maternal Ancestry(284), Maternal Ancestry(286), Maternal Ancestry(289) and Maternal Ancestry(293)) was born in 638, in Moselle, France, to Siegbert III of Austrasia[3728] and Chimnechild of The Merovingians[3729]. Bathilde was a Saint, and Queen of the Merovingians of Nuestria. She died in 680, aged about 42, in Chelles Monastery, Ile De France, France.

   Saint Balthild of Ascania around 626 – January 30, 680), also called Bathilda, Baudour, or Bauthieult, was queen consort of Burgundy and Neustria by marriage to Clovis II, the king of Burgundy and Neustria (639–658), and regent during the minority of her son. Her hagiography was intended to further her successful candidature for sainthood. Tradition represents her as an Anglo-Saxon who was originally of elite birth, perhaps a relative of Ricberht of East Anglia, the last pagan king of East Anglia, although Pierre Fournet regards this as doubtful. Ricberht was ousted by Sigeberht, who had spent time as an exile in the Frankish court, during which he had been converted to Christianity. Sigeberht was established as the rightful heir to the throne with Frankish help. Balthild was sold into slavery as a young girl and served in the household of Erchinoald, the mayor of the palace of Neustria to Clovis.

   Balthild died on January 30, 680, and was buried at the Abbey of Chelles, east of Paris. Her Vita was written soon after her death, probably by one of the community of Chelles. The Vita Baldechildis/Vita Balthildis reginae Francorum in Monumenta Germania Historica, Scriptores Rerum Merovincarum, as with most of the vitae of royal Merovingian-era saints, provides some useful details for the historian. Her official cult began when her remains were transferred from the former abbey to a new church, in 833, under the auspices of Louis the Pious. Balthild was canonised by Pope Nicholas I, around 200 years after her death.

   Clovis II der Merovingen van Neustrië[3710] married Bathilde de Chelles. They had one son:
   Theuderik der Merovingen van Neustrië[3696] born in 653; died in 708

3712. ANSEGISEL VAN AUSTRASIA (Howard Charles's forty-times-great-grandfather[3710], see Maternal Ancestry(284), Maternal Ancestry(286), Maternal Ancestry(289) and Maternal Ancestry(294)) was born in 610, in Austrasia, to Arnulf of Metz[3718] and Clothilde of Saxony[3719]. Ansegisel was a Lord of Brabant. He died in 662, aged about 52, in Ardennes, France.
3713. BEGGA VAN AUSTRAASIA (Howard Charles's forty-times-great-grandmother[3711], see Maternal Ancestry(284), Maternal Ancestry(286), Maternal Ancestry(289) and Maternal Ancestry(294)) was born in 610 to Pepin of Landen[3720] and Itta of Metz[3721]. Begga was a Saint and Abbess of Andenne-sur-Meuse. She died in 693, aged about 83. Citation: Source 96. Unreliable or estimated.

Saint Begga (± 620 - Andenne, December 17, 693) was a Frankish nobleman, daughter of Pepin van Landen and the holy Catholic monasticist Ida van Nijvel. The Collegiate Church of Sint-Begga in Andenne is dedicated to her. In this church is a 12th-century funerary monument in black marble called "The grave of Begga". Begga married about 643 Ansegisel. The latter was a son of Bishop Arnulf of Metz and his wife Doda van Metz. Both Arnulf and Doda were declared saints. From the marriage between Begga and Ansegisius, several children were born.

Pepin van Herstal (ca. 645 - 714), the later founder of the Karolingian empire (Begga son). Clothildis van Herstal (ca. 650 - 692), who married Saint Theuderik III of Burgundy and declared holy.

It is clear that several of Begga's relatives, at some point in their lives, served the Catholic Church, and some were even declared saints.

After the death of her husband and a failed coup in 662, Begga became heiress of the vast family property in the Maasdal. As a widow, she made a pilgrimage to Rome and made the vow to set up a convent and seven churches. Only after her son Pepin had secured his political position in 691, she founded a monastery in Andenne. Begga died in Andenne, probably on December 17, 693.

The St Begga is the patron of stutterers, of people with fractures, and rheumatism. The Walcherse village of Biggekerke is probably named after her.

Ansegisel van Austrasia[3712] married Begga van Austrasia. They had one daughter:

Clotildis van Metz[3697] born in 650 in France; died in 692 in Arras, France

BODILON DE TREVES (Howard Charles's forty-times-great-grandfather[3712], see Maternal Ancestry(151), Maternal Ancestry(286), Maternal Ancestry(287), Maternal Ancestry(290) and Maternal Ancestry(295)) was born in 600, in Brosse, Ile-de-France, France. Bodilon was a Count of Trêves. He died in 643, aged about 43, in Mas d'Albon, Beaucaire, Languedoc, France.

3715. SIGRADA DE VERDUN (Howard Charles's forty-times-great-grandmother[3713], see Maternal Ancestry(151), Maternal Ancestry(286), Maternal Ancestry(287), Maternal Ancestry(290) and Maternal Ancestry(295)) was born in 605, in Soissons, Aisne, Picardy, France. St. Sigrada was a sister of Didon, Bishop of Poitiers 656-670. She and her brother might have been descendants of Senator Ansbertus and of Tonantius Ferreolus, who was Consul of Rome in 453. She was the mother of St. Léger, Bishop of Autun, and St. Guérin. She was shut up in the monastery of Notre Dame de Soissons by Ebroin, who persecuted her family for their faith in Christ. Her goods were confiscated, and her son, Guérin, was stoned to death. Her other son, St. Léger, was thrown into prison, where he was subjected to cruel conditions. She died shortly after the martyrdom of her sons.

Bodilon de Treves[3714] married Sigrada de Verdun. They had two children:

Warinus of Poitiers[3698] born in 620 in Autun, Saône-et-Loire, Burgundy, France; died in 677 in Treves, Palatinate, Rheinland, Germany

Chimnechild of The Merovingians[3729] born in 625 in Burgundy, France; died in 670 in Austrasia

3716. OLOF “TRATALJA” INGJALDSSON (Howard Charles's forty-times-great-grandfather[3714], see Maternal Ancestry(136), Maternal Ancestry(202) and Maternal Ancestry(252)) was born in 682, in Värmland, Sweden, to Ingjald "Evil Doer" Anundsson[3730] and Gauthild Algautsdottir[3731]. Olof "Tratalja" became known as ‘Tratalja’. Tratalja was a King of Varmland and Viking. He died in 710, aged about 28, in Värmland, Sweden. Citation: Source 96. Unreliable or estimated.

Olaf Tree Feller (Old Norse: Óláfr trételgja, Swedish: Olof Trätälja, Norwegian: Olav Tretelgia, all meaning Olaf Woodwhittler) was the son of the Swedish king Ingjald ill-ruler of the House of Yngling according to Ynglingatal. His mother was Gauthild, a princess of West Götaland, whose maternal grandfather was Olof the Sharp-sighted, the king of Nerike. His mother sent him to his foster-father Bove in West Götlaland, where he grew up with his foster-brother Saxe who was surnamed Flette. When Olof heard of his father's death, he assembled the men who were willing to follow him and went to his kinsmen in Nerike, because after his father's atrocities, the Swedes had grown hostile towards the Ynglings. When the Swedes learnt that Olof and his kin had sought refuge in Nerike, they were attacked and had to head west through deep and mountainous forests (Kilsbergen) to Lake Vänern and the estuary of Klarälven (where Karlstad is now situated). Here, they settled and cleared land. Soon they had created a whole province called Värmland, where they could make a good living. When the Swedes learnt that Olof was clearing land, they were amused and called him the Tree-feller. Olof married a woman named Solveig who was a daughter of Halfdan Guldtand of Soleyar. Olof and Solveigh had two sons, Ingiald Olofsson and Halfdan Hvitbeinn, who were brought up in Soleyar in the house of his mother's uncle Sölve. Because of king Ivar Vidsamne and his harsh rule many Swedes emigrated to Värmland, and they became so numerous that the province could not sustain them. The land was afflicted by famine of which the Swedes accused the king. It was an old tradition in Sweden of holding the king responsible for the wealth of the land (see Domalde). The Swedes accused Olof of neglecting his sacrifices to the gods and believed that this was the cause of the famine. The Swedish settlers thus rebelled against Olof, surrounded his house on the shores of lake Vänern and burnt him inside it. Thus he was sacrificed to Odin, like his ancestor Domalde. However, Historia Norwegiae says that Olof succeeded his father and ruled as the king of Sweden in peace until his death. Along the lower parts of the river Byälven in Värmland, there are three large barrows, which legend attributes to Olof Trätälja. Moreover, there are many hillforts near this river and the northern shore of Lake Vänern testifying to a violent period. Archaeological excavations from one of the hillforts, Villkorberget, show that it was burnt in a period corresponding to Olof (510–680).

3717. SOLVEIG HALFDANSDOTTIR (Howard Charles's forty-times-great-grandmother[3715], see Maternal Ancestry(136), Maternal Ancestry(202) and Maternal Ancestry(252)) was born in 666, in Soleyar, Sweden. She died in Värmland, Sweden.

Olof "Tratalja" Ingialdsson[3716] married Solveig Halfdansdottir. They had one son:

3718. ARNULF OF METZ (Howard Charles's forty-times-great-grandfather[3717], see Maternal Ancestry(158), Maternal Ancestry(200) and Maternal Ancestry(204)) was born in 582, in Nancy, Lorraine, France, to Arnoald Sachsen of Metz[3732] and Clothilde of Armay[3733]. Arnulf was a Saint and Bishop of Metz. He died in 640, aged about 58, in Habendum, France. He was buried in Remiremont Church of the Apostles, Metz, Austrasia, Lorraine, France.

Saint Arnulf of Metz (c. 582 – 640) was a Frankish bishop of Metz and advisor to the Merovingian court of Austrasia, who retired to the Abbey of Remiremont. In French he is also known as Arnaud or Arnulf. In English he is also known as Arnold. Shortly after 800, most likely in Metz, a brief genealogy of the Carolingians was compiled, modelled in style after the genealogy of Jesus in the New Testament. According to this source, Arnulf's father was a certain Arnaud, who in turn was the son of a nobilissimus Aelbertus and Blithilde (or Blithilde), an alleged and otherwise unattested daughter of Clovis I. This claim of royal Merovingian descent is not confirmed by the contemporary reference in the Vita Sancti Arnulfi. The Vita, written shortly after the saint's death, states that he was of Frankish ancestry, from "sufficiently elevated and noble parentage, and very rich in worldly goods", without making any claims to royal blood. However, under Salic Law, no children of Blithilde would be recognized as legitimate heirs to the dynasty. Therefore, the connection may or may not have been noted in relevant documentation. Arnulf was born to an important Frankish family near Nancy in Lorraine around 582. The family owned vast domains between the Mosel and Meuse rivers. As an adolescent, he was called to the Merovingian court of king Theudebert II (595–612) of Austrasia where he was educated by Gundulf of Provence. Arnulf was later sent to serve as dux at the Schelde. Arnulf gave distinguished service at the Austrasian court under Theudebert II. He distinguished himself both as a military commander and in the civil administration; at one time he had under his care six distinct provinces. Arnulf was married ca 596 to a noblewoman whom later sources give the name of Dode or Doda, (born ca 584). Chlodulf of Metz was their oldest son, but more important is his second son Ansegisel, who married Begga daughter of...
Pepin I, Pippin of Landen. Arnulf is thus the male-line grandfather of Pepin of Herstal, great-grandfather of Charles Martel and 3rd great-grandfather of Charlemagne. After his wife took the veil as a nun in a convent at Treves, Arnulf saw it as a sign of God and became a priest and bishop afterwards. The rule of Austrasia came into the hands of Brunhilda, the grandmother of Theudebert, who ruled also in Burgundy in the name of her great-grandchildren. In 613 Arnulf joined his politics with Pippin of Landen and led the opposition of Frankish nobles against Queen Brunhilda. The revolt led to her overthrow, torture, and eventual execution, and the subsequent reuniﬁcation of Frankish lands under Chlothachar II. He and his friend Romaric, likewise an ofﬁcer of the court, planned to make a pilgrimage to the Abbey of Lérrins. Chlothachar, who appreciated Arnulf’s administrative skills, offered him the vacant see of Metz, the capital of the Austrasian kingdom. Arnulf continued to serve the king’s steward and courtier. Chlothachar later made his son Dagobert I king of Austrasia, which he ruled with the help of his adviser Arnulf. Pippin of Landen, became the Mayor of the Palace. In 624 Pippin and Arnulf encouraged Dagobert in the murder of Chrodoald, an important leader of the Frankish Agilolfings family. During his career he was attracted to religious life, and he retired to become a monk. He retired around 628 to a hermitage at a mountain site in his domains in the Vosges. His friend Romaric, whose parents were killed by Brunhilda, had preceded him to the mountains around 613, and together with Amatus had already established Remiremont Abbey there. After the death of Chlothachar in 629, Arnulf settled near Habendum, where he died some time between 643 and 647. He was buried at Remiremont.

Arnulf was canonized as a saint by the Roman Catholic Church. In iconography he is portrayed with a rake in his hand.

3719. CLOTHILDE OF SAXONY (Howard Charles's forty-times-great-grandmother[3718], see Maternal Ancestry(158), Maternal Ancestry(200), Maternal Ancestry(204) and Maternal Ancestry(286)) was born in 584. Clothilde was a Saint. She died in 639, aged about 55.

Arnulf of Metz[3718] married Clothilde of Saxony. They had two sons:

Ansegisel van Austrasia[3712] born in 610 in Austrasia; died in 662 in Ardennes, France
Ansegisel of Metz[3704] born in 620 in Metz, Nievre, Bourgogne, France; died in 679

3720. PEPIN OF LANDEN (Howard Charles's forty-times-great-grandfather[3719], see Maternal Ancestry(158), Maternal Ancestry(200), Maternal Ancestry(205) and Maternal Ancestry(286)) was born in 580, in Landen, Belgium, to Carloman of Landen[3734] and Amalberga of Thuringen[3735]. Pepin became known as ‘The Old’. The Old was a Mayor of the Palace of Austrasia. He died on 27 February 640, aged about 59, in Landen, Flemish Brabant, Flanders, Belgium.

Pepin I (also Peppin, Pipin, or Pippin) of Landen (c. 580 – 27 February 640), also called the Elder or the Old, was the Mayor of the Palace of Austrasia under the Merovingian king Dagobert I from 623 to 629. He was also the mayor for Sigebert III from 639 until his death. Through the marriage of his daughter Begga to Ansegisel, a son of Arnulf of Metz, the clans of the Pippinids and the Arnulfings were united, giving rise to a family which would eventually rule the Franks as the Carolingians. Pepin's father is named Carloman by the Chronicle of Fredegar, the chief source for his life. His byname comes from his probable birthplace: Landen, modern Belgium. However, according to Godfried Kurth, it was only in the twelfth century that the chroniclers of Brabant began to associate him with that locality. He is sometimes called Pepin I and his other nicknames (Elder and Old) come from his position at the head of the family called the Pippinids after him.

He was lord of a great part of Brabant, and governor of Austrasia, when Theodebert II, king of that country was defeated by Theodoric II, king of Burgundy. In 613, several leading magnates of Austrasia and Burgundy abandoned Brunhilda, the great-grandmother and regent of their king, Sigebert II, and turned to Chlothar of Neustria for support, promising not to rise in defense of the queen-regent and recognizing Chlothar as rightful regent and guardian of the young king. Chief among these leading men were Warnachar II, Rado, Arnulf, and Pepin. The latter two were described by Fredegar as the "two most powerful barons of Austrasia" and they made some agreement with Chlothar at Andernach. However, while Rado was confirmed as mayor in Austrasia and Warnachar in Burgundy, Pepin did not receive his reward until 623, when he was appointed mayor in Austrasia after Chlothar made his young son Dagobert king there. Arnulf, his lifelong friend, was appointed adviser to the new king alongside him. Pepin was praised by his contemporaries for his good government and wise counsel. Though some enemies tried to turn the king against him, their plots were foiled and Pepin remained on good terms with the king until 629, when, for reasons unknown, he retired (or was retired) to his estates, where he remained for the next decade, until Dagobert's death.

On his death, Pepin came out of retirement to take on the mayorality in Austrasia for the heir.
Sigebert III and to oversee the distribution of the treasury between Sigebert and his brother, Clovis II, and his stepmother Nanthild, who was ruling on Clovis' behalf in Neustria and Burgundy. Sigebert's share of the inheritance was amicably surrendered, partly because of the friendship between Pepin and the Burgundian mayor of the palace, Aega. Pepin and Arnulf's successor as chief counselor to the king, Cunibert, Bishop of Cologne, received the treasure at Compiègne and brought it back to Metz. Pepin died in 639. He was so popular in Austrasia that, though he was never canonized, he was listed as a saint in some martyrologies.

3721. SAINT ITTA OF METZ (Howard Charles's forty-times-great-grandmother[3720], see Maternal Ancestry(158), Maternal Ancestry(200), Maternal Ancestry(205) and Maternal Ancestry(286)) was born on 8 May 652, aged about 59, in Nivelles, Walloon Region, Belgium. She was buried in Abbey of Nivelles (present St. Gertrudes Collegiate Church), Nivelles, Walloon Brabant, Belgium.

Itta of Metz, O.S.B. (also Ida, Itte or Iduberga; 592–8 May 652) was the wife of Pepin of Landen, Mayor of the Palace of the Kingdom of Austrasia. After his death, she founded the Abbey of Nivelles, where she became a Benedictine nun along with her daughter, Gertrude of Nivelles. Both are honored as saints by the Catholic Church.

There is no direct record of her parents, but it has been suggested that she came from a family of senatorial status which had originated in Aquitaine, and was a daughter of Arnoald, Bishop of Metz, son of Ansbertus. Her brother was Saint Modoald, Bishop of Trier, and her sister was the abbess, Saint Severa.

After Pepin's death in 640, Itta and her daughter withdrew from the capital for a life of religious reflection. Later, around 647, on the advice of Amandus, the Bishop of Maastricht, she founded the Abbey of Nivelles. The abbey was originally just a community of nuns, but it later became a double monastery when the nuns were joined by a group of Irish monks who offered them support in the operations of the abbey. She might have appointed her daughter, Gertrude, as its first abbess, while she herself lived there as a simple nun, assisting the young abbess by her advice. Itta died at the abbey on 8 May 652.

Itta had another daughter by Pepin, Abbess Begga of Andenne, who had married Ansegisel, son of Arnulf of Metz prior to joining the monastery. By Begga, she is the grandmother of Pepin of Herstal and one of the matriarchs of the great Carolingian family. Her sons were Grimoald, later Mayor of the Palace, and father of King Childebert the Adopted. Itta's second son Bavo (or Allowin), became a hermit and was later canonized. Both her daughters were also canonized, as was she. Her feast day is celebrated on 8 May. Itta is honored as the patron saint of the French village of Itteville, which was founded on the site of a farm which she had established.

Pepin of Landen[3720] married Itta of Metz. They had two daughters:

- Begga van Austrasia[3713] born in 610; died in 693
- Begga of Andenne[3705] born in 615 in Austrasia, France; died on 17 December 693 in Saint Begga's Collegiate Church in Andenne

3722. HUGHES VON ECTERNACH (Howard Charles's forty-times-great-grandfather[3721], see Maternal Ancestry(158), Maternal Ancestry(201) and Maternal Ancestry(206)) was born in 620, in Austrasia, France. Hughes was a Mayor of the Palace of Austrasia, Hausmeier von Austrasien (617 - 623). He died in 698, aged about 78, in Austrasia, France.

3723. SAINT IRMINA VON OHREN (Howard Charles's forty-times-great-grandmother[3722], see Maternal Ancestry(158), Maternal Ancestry(201) and Maternal Ancestry(206)) was born in Ohren, Limburg-Weilburg, Hessen, Germany. Irmina was a Saint and Abbess of Oeren. She died on 25 December 704 in Weissenburg, Monastery of / Kloster von Weissenburg, Germany.

Irmina of Oeren or Irmina of Trier (d. 704/710) was the wife of Hugobert, seneschal and Count palatine, a leading person of the Hugobertine noble family. While during the High Middle Ages she was believed to be a daughter of King Dagobert II, her parents are actually unknown. Today it is assumed that she came from a powerful Austrasian noble family, strongly connected to the Carolingian dynasty.

After Hugobert's death the now widowed Irmina founded with support from the bishop of Trier the Abbey of Echternach by donating (c. 697/698) lands to Willibrord. She also committed herself to a religious life for the remaining years and became second abbess of St. Mary's... convent in Oeren (today a part of Trier) which was later renamed after her: St. Irmina (or St. Irminen). Irmina died at an uncertain date between 704 and 710.

Hughes von Ecternach married Irmina von Ohren. They had one son: Hugobert von Ecternach born in 640 in Heristal, Liege, Wallonia, Belgium; died in 697 in Senechal, Bayern, Germany

CHARIBERT I VAN HASPENGAU (Howard Charles's forty-one-times-great-grandfather[3723], see Maternal Ancestry(283), Maternal Ancestry(285), Maternal Ancestry(288) and Maternal Ancestry(292)) was born in 600, in Neustria, Siagrius, France, to Charibert van Haspengau[3738] and Wulfgard de Ardennes[3739]. Charibert I was a Count of Hesbaye. He died on 8 April 630, aged about 29, in Neustria, Siagrius, France.

Charibert II (607/617–8 April 632), a son of Clotaire II and his junior wife Sichilde, was briefly King of Aquitaine from 629 to his death, with his capital at Toulouse. We have no direct statement about when Charibert was born exactly, only that he was "a few years younger" than his half-brother Dagobert. His father Clotaire evidently had a bigamous marriage (not then uncommon) and he was the offspring of the junior wife.

When his father, Clotaire II, King of the Franks, died in 629, Charibert made a bid for the kingdom of Neustria against his elder half-brother Dagobert I, who had already been king of Austrasia since 623. In the ensuing negotiations, Charibert, a minor, was represented by his uncle Brodulf, the brother of Queen Sichilde. Dagobert had Brodulf killed, but did not intercede when his half-brother took over the near-independent realm of Aquitaine. Apparently this caused no disagreement, as in 631 Charibert stood godfather to Dagobert's son Sigebert.

Charibert's realm included Toulouse, Cahors, Agen, Périgueux, and Saintes, to which he added his possessions in Gascony. Charibert was married to Gisela, the daughter of Amand, Ruler of the Gascons. His fighting force subdued the resistance of the Basques, until the whole Novempopulania (become Duchy of Vasconia) was under his control.

In 632, Charibert died at Blaye, Gironde—possibly assassinated on Dagobert's orders—and soon after that Charibert's infant son Chilperic was also killed. Aquitaine passed again to Dagobert. Both Charibert and his son are buried in the early Romanesque Basilica of Saint-Romain at Blaye.

SIEGBERT III OF AUSTRASIA (Howard Charles's forty-one-times-great-grandfather[3727], see Maternal Ancestry(284), Maternal Ancestry(286), Maternal Ancestry(289) and Maternal Ancestry(293)) was born on 9 October 630, in Metz, to Dagobert I der Merovingen van Neustrië[3726] and Ragentrude van Ardenne[3727]. Siegbert III was a Saint and King of Austrasia. He died on 1 February 656, aged 25, in St Martin. He was buried in Abbey of Saint Martin near Metz.
Sigebert III (c. 630–656) was the Merovingian king of Austrasia from 633 to his death around 656. He was described as the first Merovingian roi fainéant —do-nothing king—, in effect the mayor of the palace ruling the kingdom throughout his reign. However he lived a pious Christian life and was later sanctified, being remembered as Saint Sigebert of Austrasia in the Roman Catholic Church and Eastern Orthodox Church.

Sigebert III died of natural causes on 1 February 656 at age 25. He was buried in the Abbey of Saint Martin near Metz which he had founded. In 1063 his body, found incorrupt, was taken out of the tomb and moved on the side of the altar. The abbey was demolished in 1552 and the relics were moved to the Nancy Cathedral. Sigebert III is revered as a saint by the Catholic Church with his feast day on 1 February. He is the patron saint of Nancy.

CHIMNECHILD OF THE MEROVINGIANS (Howard Charles's forty-one-times-great-grandmother[3728], see Maternal Ancestry(284), Maternal Ancestry(286), Maternal Ancestry(289) and Maternal Ancestry(293)) was born in 625, in Burgundy, France, to Bodilon de Treves[3714] and Sigrada de Verdun[3715]. Chimnechild was a Queen of Austrasia. She died in 670, aged about 45, in Austrasia.

Siegbert III of Austrasia[3728] married Chimnechild of The Merovingians. They had one daughter:

Bathilde de Chelles[3711] born in 638 in Moselle, France; died in 680 in Chelles Monastery, Ile De France, France

3730. INGJALD "EVIL DOER" ANUNDSSON (Howard Charles's forty-one-times-great-grandfather[3729], see Maternal Ancestry(136), Maternal Ancestry(202) and Maternal Ancestry(252)) was born in 660, in Värmland, Sweden, to Anund The Land Clearer Ingvarsson[3743]. Ingjald "Evil Doer" became known as ‘Evil Doer’. Evil Doer was a King of Sweden (Viking). He died in 723, aged about 63, in Värmland, Sweden.

Ingjald is mentioned in the Ynglinga saga, Historia Norvegiæ, Hervarar saga, Uppledinga Konungum, Porsteins saga Vikingssonar and Æslingsabók. The Ynglinga saga, a part of the Heimskringla relates that the vicerey of Fjädrundaland was named Ingvar and he had two sons, Alf and Agnar, who were of the same age as Ingjald. Svipdag the Blind was the vicerey of Tiundaland, the province of Uppsala where the Tings and the Yule (Midwinter) sacrifices were held (see the Temple at Uppsala).

One Midwinter, when Ingjald and Alf were six years old, many people had assembled at Uppsala for the sacrifices. Alf and Ingjald played, but Ingjald found that he was the weaker boy and became so angry that he almost started to cry. His foster-brother Gautvid led him to his foster-father Svigdag the Blind and told Svipdag about Ingjald's lack of manliness and strength. Svipdag said that it was a shame and the next day he gave Ingjald a roasted wolf's heart to eat. From that day, Ingjald became a very ferocious person and had a bad disposition.

Anund arranged a marriage for his son Ingjald with Gauthild, the daughter of the Geatish king Algaut, who was the son of Gautrek the Mild and the grandson of Gaut. Gautrek consented as he believed that Ingjald had inherited his father's disposition. Gauthild's maternal grandfather was Olof the Sharp-sighted, the king of Närke.

Snorri Sturluson relates that when his father Anund had died, Ingjald became the king of Sweden. The kings at Uppsala were the foremost among the kings of the various provinces since Odin ruled the country, and they were the supreme chiefs of the other kingdoms since the death of Agne and Sweden was divided between Erik and Alrik. The descendants of these two kings had spread, cleared land and settled new territories, until there were several petty kings.

In honour of his own ascendance to the throne, Ingjald invited the kings, the jarls and other important men to a grand feast in a newly built hall, just as large and sumptuous as the one in Uppsala. It was called the hall of the seven kings and had seven high seats. Algaut the Geatish king of West Götaland, King Ingvar of Fjädrundaland with his two sons Agnar and Alf, King Sporsnjall of Nerike and King Sigvat of Attundaland came but not King Granmar of Södermanland. The kings filled all seven seats but one. All the prominent people of Sweden had seats, except for Ingjald's own court whom he had sent to his old hall in Uppsala. According to the custom of the time for those who inherited kings and jarls, Ingjald rested at the footstool until the Bragebeaker was brought in. Then he was supposed to stand up, take the beaker and make solemn vows, after which he would ascend his father's high seat. However, when the beaker was brought in, he took a bull's horn and made the solemn vow that he would enlarge his own kingdom by half towards all the four quarters, towards which he pointed his horn, or die.

When all the prominent guests were drunk, he ordered Svipdag's sons, Gautvid and Hylvid, to arm themselves and their men and to leave the building. Outside, they set fire to the building which burnt down and those who tried to escape were killed.

Thus Ingjald made himself the sole ruler of the domains of the murdered kings. Granmar won allies in his son-in-law the sea-king Hjörvard of the Ylfings and his father-in-law Högne the Geatish king of East Götaland. They successfully withstood Ingjald's invasion where Ingjald realised that the men from the provinces he had conquered were not loyal to him. After a long standstill there was peace for as long as the three kings lived. However, one night Ingjald and his men surrounded a farm where Granmar and Hjörvard were at a feast and burnt the house down. He late disposed of five more kings, and he thus earned the name Illråde (ill-ruler) as he fulfilled his promise.

Snorri Sturluson tells that it was a common saying that Ingjald killed twelve kings by deceiving them that he only wished for peace, and that he thus earned his cognomen Illråde (ill-ruler or ill-adviser). Ingjald had two children, a son Olof Trätälja and a daughter Åsa. His daughter had inherited her father's psychopathic disposition. She married king Guðröðr of Skåne. Before she murdered her husband she managed to make him kill his own brother Halfdan the Valiant, the father of the great Ivar Vidfamne. In order to avenge his father, Ivar Vidfamne gathered a vast host and departed for Sweden, where he found Ingjald at Ræning. When Ingjald and his daughter realized that it was futile to resist, they set the hall on fire and succumbed in the flames.

It is interesting to note that the citation from Ynglingatal does not appear to describe Ingjald as an evil king. It calls his life a brave life frœknu fjörvi:

Charibert II (607/617–8 April 632), a son of Clotaire II and his junior wife Sichilde, was briefly King of Aquitaine from 629 to his death, with his capital at Toulouse. We have no direct statement about when Charibert was born exactly, only that he was "a few years younger" than his half-brother Dagobert.[1] His father Clotaire evidently had a bigamous marriage (not then uncommon) and he was the offspring of the junior wife.

When his father, Clotaire II, King of the Franks, died in 629, Charibert made a bid for the kingdom of Neustria against his elder half-brother Dagobert I, who had already been king of Austrasia since 623. In the ensuing negotiations, Charibert, a minor, was represented by his uncle Brodulf, the brother of Queen Sichilde. Dagobert had Brodulf killed, but did not intercede when his half-brother took over the near-independent realm of Aquitaine. Apparently this caused no disagreement, as in 631 Charibert stood godfather to Dagobert's son Sigerd. Charibert's realm included Toulouse, Cahors, Agen, Périgueux, and Saintes, to which he added his possessions in Gascony. Charibert was married to Gisela, the daughter of Amand, Ruler of the Gascons. His fighting force subdued the resistance of the Basques, until the whole Novempopulania (become Duchy of Vasconia) was under his control.

In 632, Charibert died at Blaye, Gironde—possibly assassinated on Dagobert's orders—and soon after that Charibert's infant son Chilperic was also killed. Aquitaine passed again to Dagobert. Both Charibert and his son are buried in the early Romanesque Basilica of Saint-Romain at Blaye.

Sichilde (ca. 590–627) was a Frankish queen consort in 618–627; married to Clotaire II. She was the daughter of count Brunulphe II of the Ardennes and the sister of Gomatrude (598–630), who was married to Dagobert I; her maternal grandfather was royal maior domus. She married Clotaire in about 618. In 626 or 627, she was suspected of having had a relationship with Boso, son of Audolène of Tampes, and Boso was killed by the duke Arnebert on the order of Clotaire.

Charibert van Haspengau[3738] married Wulfgard de Ardennes. They had one son:

Chlothar II (or Chlotar, Clothar, Clotheard, or Hlothar; 584–629), called the Great or the Young, was King of Neustria and King of the Franks, and the son of Chilperic I and his third wife, Fredegund. He started his reign as an infant under the regency of his mother, who was in an uneasy alliance with Clothar's uncle Guntram, King of Burgundy (d. 592). Clothar assumed full power over Neustria upon her death in 597; though rich this was one of the smallest portions of Francia. He continued his mother's feud with Queen Brunbilda of Austrasia with equal viciousness and bloodshed, finally achieving her execution in an especially brutal manner in 613, after winning the battle that enabled Chlothar to unite Francia under his rule. Like his father, he built up his territories by moving in after the deaths of other kings.

His reign was long by contemporary standards, but saw the continuing erosion of royal power to the nobility and the church against a backdrop of feuding among the Merovingians. The Edict of Paris in 614, concerned with several aspects of appointments to offices and the administration of the kingdom, has been interpreted in different ways by modern historians. In 617 he made the Mayor of the Palace a role held for life, an important step in the progress of this office from being first the manager of the royal household to the effective head of government, and eventually the monarch, under Pepin the Short in 751. Chlothar was forced to cede rule over Austrasia to his young son Dagobert I in 623. Unusually for a Merovingian monarch, he practised monogamy, though deaths meant that he had three queens. He was generally an ally of the church and, perhaps inspired by the example of his uncle Guntram, his reign seems to lack the outrageous acts of murder perpetrated by many of his relations, the execution of Brunhilda excepted.

Richemir, Duke of the Burgundians & Franconians. He was Patrician of the Burgundians, and Duke in Franconia and Burgundy. Said on unknown authority to have been a son of Betton d'Orléans, who was also duke in Franconia and Burgundy, and his wife Austregild. The Burgundians were conquered by the Franks in 534. The Franks also recovered Provence from the Ostrogoths and re-attached it to Burgundy in 536. The Merovingian kings of the Franks kept Burgundy as a distinct entity under their personal rule. Died after 605.

Anund, Swedish: Bröt-Anund meaning trail-blazer Anund or Anund the Land Clearer; alternate names Bret-Anundr (Old East Norse) or Braut-Önundr (Old West Norse), was a legendary Swedish king of the House of Yngling who reigned in the mid-seventh century. The name would have been Proto-Norse *Anuwinduz meaning "winning ancestor".

In his Ynglinga saga, Snorri Sturluson relates that Anund succeeded his father Ingvar on the Swedish throne, and after his father's wars against Danish Vikings and Estonian pirates, peace reigned over Sweden and there were good harvests. Anund was a popular king who became very rich, not only because of the peace and the good harvests but also because he avenged his father in Estonia. That country was ravaged far and wide and in the autumn Anund returned with great riches. In those days Sweden was dominated by vast and uninhabited forests, so Anund started making roads and clearing land and vast districts were settled by Swedes. Consequently, he was named Bröt-Anund. He made a house for himself in every district and used to stay as a guest in many homes.

One autumn, King Anund was travelling between his halls (see Husbys) and came to a place called Himinheiðr (sky heath) between two mountains. He was surprised by a landslide which killed him.

Anund The Land Clearer fathered one son:

Ingjaldr "Evil Doer" Anundsson[3730] born in 660 in Värmland, Sweden; died in 723 in Värmland, Sweden
Gondulphus was a Saint, and Bishop of Tongres. He died on 6 July 607, aged about 83, in Tongres, France.

Gondulphe (Latin: Gondulfus, Gundulphus, perhaps also Bethulphus) of Maastricht, sometimes of Tongeren (6th/7th century AD) was a Bishop of Tongeren-Maastricht and is venerated as a Roman Catholic and Eastern Orthodox saint. Saint Gondulphus is one of the patron saints of the city of Maastricht, together with Saint Servatius and Saint Monulph. According to some 11th century sources it was his predecessor Monulph who transferred the see of the bishopric from Tongeren to Maastricht. However, the official title episcopus Tungrorum (bishop of Tongeren) was retained until the 10th century, even when the episcopal see had by that time been transferred from Maastricht to Liège.

Bishop Gondulphus has remained a somewhat enigmatic figure. One is inclined to question whether he could be identical with Monulph but the two saints must nevertheless be distinguished.

Monulph must have occupied the See of Tongeren-Maastricht until the end of the 6th, beginning of the 7th century, because a bishop of Maastricht named Betulphus was present at the Council of Paris in 614. Gondulphus could then have been inserted between Monulph and Betulphus, at least if Betulphus must not be identified with Gondulphus. The case is similar to the situation in the Archbishopric of Mainz, where Bertulfus and Crotoldus seem to be identical. Furthermore, the episcopal lists of the 11th and 12th centuries, which value is not very great, ignore the historically attested Betulphus, and make Gondulphus the immediate successor of Monulph. The biographies of Gondulphus from the Middle Ages are largely extracts from the Vita Servatii by the French priest Jocundus, which are not entirely trustworthy.

If Jocundus is to be believed, Gondulphus endeavoured to rebuild the town of Tongeren, which had been destroyed during the barbarian invasions. Heavenly intervention caused furious wolves to attack the pagan colonists of the region and devoured them before the eyes of the horrified bishop. Legend thus has obscured the historical facts about Gondulphus. According to tradition he occupied the episcopal see of Maastricht for seven years. This last date does not allow for his presence at the Paris council in 614. He was buried in the nave of the church of Saint Servatius in Maastricht, which was built by his predecessor Monulph.

The bodies of Monulph and Gondulphus were solemnly exhumed in 1039 by the Bishops Nithard of Liège and Gerard of Florennes, Bishop of Cambrai in the presence of Henry III, Holy Roman Emperor. An epitaph commemorating this event was later misinterpreted, and gave rise to a legend according to which the two saints arose from their tomb in 1039 in order to assist at the dedication of Aachen cathedral.

Palatina Troyes (Howard Charles's forty-two-times-great-grandmother[3744], see Maternal Ancestry(158), Maternal Ancestry(200) and Maternal Ancestry(204)) was born in 547. She died in 562, aged about 15. Gondulphus of Tongres And Maastricht[3744] married Palatina Troyes. They had one son:

Radegund was born about 520 to Bertachar, one of the three kings of the German land Thuringia. Radegund's uncle, Hermanfrid, killed Bertachar in battle, and took Radegund into his household. After allying with the Frankish King Theuderic, Hermanfrid defeated his other brother Baderic. However, having crushed his brothers and seized control of Thuringia, Hermanfrid reneged on his agreement with Theuderic to share sovereignty. In 531, Theuderic returned to Thuringia with his brother Clotaire I (also known as Chlothar). Together they defeated Hermanfrid and conquered his kingdom. Clotaire I also took charge of Radegund, taking her back to Merovingian Gaul[1] with him. He sent the child to his villa of Athies in Picardy for several years, before marrying her in 540.

Radegund was one of Clotaire I’s six wives or concubines (the other five being Guntheuca who was the widow of his brother Chlodomer, Chunsina, Ingund, Ingund’s sister Aregund and Wuldegrada the widow of Clotaire’s grand-nephew Theudebald). She bore him no children. Radegund was noted for her almsgiving. By 550 Radegund’s brother was the last surviving male member of the Thuringian royal family. Clotaire had him murdered. Radegund fled the court and sought the protection of the Church, persuading the bishop of Noyon to appoint her a deaconess:[1] founding the monastery of Sainte-Croix in Poitiers circa 560, where she cared for the infirm. She ate nothing but legumes and green vegetables: neither fruit nor fish nor eggs. Radegund was widely believed to have the gift of healing.

Living under the Rule for Virgins of Caesarius of Arles, the nuns were required to be able to read and write, and to devote several hours of the day to reading the scriptures and copying manuscripts, as well as traditional tasks such as weaving and needlework. This Rule strictly enclosed women, to the point that nuns of Sainte-Croix were unable to attend Radegund's funeral.

Her abbey was named for the relic of the True Cross that Radegund obtained from the Byzantine Emperor Justin II. Although the bishop of Poitiers Maroveus refused to install it in the abbey, at Radegund’s request king Sigebert sent Eufronius of Tours to Poitiers to perform the ceremony. To celebrate the relic and its installation into Sainte-Croix, Venantius Fortunatus composed a series of hymns, including the famous vexilla regis, considered to be one of the most significant Christian hymns ever written, which is still sung for services on Good Friday.

Theodimir of Suebic Galicia[3748], aged about 22, married Radegonde von Thuringia, aged about 42, in 552 in Austrasia, France. They had one daughter:

Chilperic I (c. 539 – September 584) was the king of Neustria (or Soissons) from 561 to his death. He was one of the sons of the Frankish king Clotaire I and Queen Aregund. Most of what is known of Chilperic comes from The History of the Franks by Gregory of Tours. Gregory detested Chilperic, calling him "the Nero and Herod of his time" (VI.46): he had provoked Gregory's wrath by wresting Tours from Austrasia, seizing ecclesiastical property, and appointing as bishops counts of the palace who were not clerics. Gregory also objected to Chilperic's attempts to teach a new doctrine of the Trinity. Chilperic's reign in Neustria saw the introduction of the Byzantine punishment of eye-gouging. Yet, he was also a man of culture: he was a musician of some talent, and he wrote verse (modelled on that of Sedulius); he attempted to reform the Frankish alphabet; and he worked to reduce the worst effects of Salic law upon women.

In September 584, while returning from a hunting expedition to his royal villa of Chelles, Chilperic was stabbed to death by an unknown assailant.

Fredegund was born into a low-ranking family but gained power through her association with King Chilperic. Originally a servant of Chilperic's first wife Audovera, Fredegund won Chilperic's affection and persuaded him to put Audovera in a convent and divorce her. Gregory of Tours remarks that Fredegund brought with her a handsome dowry, incurring the immediate affection of King Chilperic. But Chilperic then put Fredegund aside and married Galswintha. Galswintha died the same year, probably strangled by Fredegund (c. 568), who succeeded Galswintha as queen. Galswintha's sister, Brunhilda, however, began a feud which lasted more than 40 years.

Fredegund is said to have ordered the assassination of Sigebert I of Austrasia in 575 and also to have made attempts on the lives of Sigebert's son Childerich II, his brother-in-law Guntram, king of Burgundy, and Brunhild. After the mysterious assassination of Chilperic in 584 AD Fredegund seized the Kings riches and took refuge in the Notre Dame de Paris cathedral. Both she and her surviving son, Clothar II, were protected by Guntram until he died in 592. Newly widowed, Fredegund attempted to seduce the Neustrian official Eberulf, but was ultimately rejected. Gregory of Tours later suspects her of orchestrating Eberulf's assassination. Gregory of Tours depicts her as ruthlessly murderous and sadistically cruel; in his account, Fredegund perhaps has few rivals in monstrousness. Although she did not live to see it, her son's execution of Brunhilda bore the mark of Fredegund's hatred: Clothar II had the old queen, now in her sixties, stretched in agony upon the rack for three entire days, then watched her meet her death chained between four horses that were goaded to the four points of the compass, tearing her body asunder. Gregory also suggests that the Queen was sexually immoral. During a dinner with King Guntram, the recently widowed Frédégund rose to leave the table with the excuse that she is pregnant. The announcement surprised the King, as her son Clothar II was born only four months earlier. Gregory of Tours interprets this exchange as a result of Frédégund’s unfaithfulness to her husband. Frédégund died of natural causes 8 December 597 in Paris. The tomb of Frédégonde is a mosaic figure of marble and copper, situated in the Saint Denis Basilica, having come from the abbey church of Saint-Germain-des-Prés.

Yngvar Harra (or Ingvar) Proto-Norse *Ingu-Hariz (d. early 7th century) was the son of Östen and reclaimed the Swedish throne for the House of Yngling after the Swedes had rebelled against Söivi. Snorri Sturluson relates in his Ynglinga saga that King Ingvar, Östen's son, was a great warrior who often spent time patrolling the shores of his kingdom fighting Danes and Estonian vikings (Víkingr frá Esthland). King Ingvar finally came to a peace agreement with the Danes and could take care of the Estonian vikings. He consequently started pillaging in Estonia in retribution, and one summer he arrived at a place called Stein (see also Sveigder). The Estonians (sýslu kind) assembled a great army in the interior and attacked King Ingvar in a great battle. The Estonian forces were too powerful and Ingvar fell and the Swedish forces retreated. Ingvar was buried in a mound at a place called Stone or Hill fort (at Steini) on the shores of Estonia (Aðalsýsla).

Ingvar The Tall fathered one son:

Anund The Land Clearer Ingvarsson[3743] born in 638 in Västergötland, Sweden; died in 660 in Svitjod, Sweden

3755. MUNDERIC OF VITREY-EN-PERTHOIS (Howard Charles's forty-three-times-great-grandfather[3754], see Maternal Ancestry(200), Maternal Ancestry(204) and Maternal Ancestry(207)) was born in 495, in Cologne, Germany, to Chlodéric The Parricide of Cologne[3764] and Chroma of Burgundy[3765]. Munderic was a Seigneur de Vitry-en-Perthois, Roman Senator at Narbonne. He died (Murdered by Thierry I, Prince of Cologne in 532) in 532, aged about 37, in Vitrey-en-Perthois, Marne, Champagne, France.

Munderic (died 532/33) was a Merovingian claimaint to the Frankish throne. He was a wealthy nobleman and landowner with vast estates in the region around Vitry-le-Brûle (now Vitry-en-Perthois) near Châlons-sur-Marne. In 532 or 533 or around that year he put forth a claim to royal descent as being or claiming to be a son of Chlodoric the Parricide and asked for a share of the kingdom of Austrasia from Theuderic I. He had a band of sworn followers. Theuderic attempted to summon him to court in order to kill him, but after Munderic refused, a force was sent against him. The pretender took refuge with his loyal supporters in Vitry. The Austrasian army, however, lacked siege engines and were unable to seriously invest the place. Theuderic responded by sending a personal courtier of his, Arigisel, to negotiate for the rebels to come out, which they did. The dishonest ambassador had them cut down immediately.

He married a daughter of Florentinus (born 485), a Roman senator, and his wife Artemia, daughter of Rusticus of Lyons. They were the parents of Gondulphus of Tongeren and Mummolin, possibly mayor of the palace of Neustria.

Clotaire was a King of the Merovingians. He died (Pneumonia) on 29 November 561, aged about 64, in Braines, Loire-Atlantique, Pays de la Loire, France. He was buried in Soissons in the Basilica of St. Marie.

Chlothar I[1] (c. 497 – 29 November 561), called the Old (le Vieux), King of the Franks, was one of the four sons of Clovis I of the Merovingian dynasty. Although his father had united Francia for the first time, he had divided the kingdom between his four sons, and at the age of about 14 Chlothar inherited two large territories on the Western coasts, separated by the lands of his brother's Kingdom of Paris. He spent most of his life in an unedifying struggle to expand his territories at the expense of his relatives and neighbouring realms in all directions. Outright war with his brothers was avoided; they cooperated in attacking neighbouring lands in concert or swooping on lands when the ruler died. In both cases the spoils were then shared out between the participating brothers. By the end of his life he had managed to reunite the Frankish kingdom by outliving his brothers and grabbing their territories after their deaths. On his death Francia was once again divided between his four surviving sons; another had rebelled and been killed with his family. Clovis had also converted to Nicene Christianity, but Chlothar, like other Merovingians, did not consider that monogamy should be expected of royalty, and had five wives, more from political expediency than personal motives. He was a less than enthusiastic Christian, who succeeded in introducing taxes on church property. Probably mainly at the instigation of his queens, he did give money for several new buildings.

Aregund, Aregunda, Arnegund, Aregonda, or Arnegonda (c. 515/520–580) was a Frankish queen, the wife of Clotaire I, king of the Franks, and the mother of Chilperic I of Neustria. She was the sister of Ingund, one of Clotaire's other wives. Ingund and Aregund were the daughters of Baderic, King of Thuringia. It is said that Ingund was quite alarmed at her sister staying single and asked her husband Clotaire to find Aregund a husband. After meeting his sister-in-law, Clotaire is rumoured to have announced to his wife that he had found her a suitable husband-himself. While Ingund bore 5 sons and one daughter, Aregund bore only one son. The study of Aregund's skeleton suggests she had a child when she was aged about 18. However, in Frankish society at the time, girls generally married around the age of 15. Aregund likely had a limp as osteo-archaeology has shown that she suffered from poliomyelitis at a young age. Clotaire may have married his sister-in-law out of pity, as she was not deemed marriageable due to her lameness. Alternatively, as the death rate from childbirth was high, Aregund may have succeeded her sister to foster her orphaned nephews and nieces. Ingund died between 538 and 546 AD.

Clotaire of The Merovingians[3757] married Arégonde van Thuringia. They had three sons:

Charibert van Haspengau[3750] born in 520 in Cambrai, France; died in 575 in Paris, France
Chilperic van Haspengouw[3752] born in 535 in Soissons, Aisne, Picardie, France; died on 7 May 584 in Chelles, Paris, Ile-de-France

Eysteinn (Swedish: Östen; died ca 600) was the son of Eadgils and Yrsa of Saxony. He was the father of Ingvar. The Eysteinn tumulus (Östens hög) in Västerås near Östanbro has been linked to King Eysteinn by some popular historians. The term Hög is derived from the Old Norse word haugr meaning mound or barrow.

Eysteinn ruled Sweden at the time when Hrólf Kraki died in Lejre.[1] It was a troubled time when many sea kings ravaged Swedish shores. One of those kings was named Sölve and he was from Jutland (but according to Historia Norwegiae he was Geatish, see below). At this time Sölve was pillaging in the Baltic Sea. He arrived in Lofond (probably the island of Lovin or the Lagunda Hundred), where Eysteinn was at a feast. Sölve and his men surrounded the house and set it on fire burning everyone inside to death. Then Sölve arrived at Sigtuna (Old Sigtuna) and ordered the Swedes to accept him as king. The Swedes refused and gathered an army that fought against Sölve and his men, but they lost after eleven days. The Swedes had to accept him as king until they rebelled and killed him.

Eystein fathered one son:

Chlodéric The Parricide was a King of the Franks at Cologne. He died (Murdered by his father, on order of Clovis I) in 509, aged about 31, in Cologne, North Rhine-Westphalia, Germany. He was buried in Saint Denis Basilica, Paris, Ile-de-France, France.

Chlodoric (or Chloderic) the Parricide (died c. 509) was a son of Sigobert the Lame, a Frankish king.

According to Gregory of Tours, Chlodoric murdered his own father in order to take his kingdom, acting upon the instigation of Clovis I, a rival king of the Salian Franks. After Sigobert's death Clovis then accused Chlodoric of the murder and had him killed for the crime, whereupon Clovis took over the kingdom from Chlodoric.

Gregory suggests that Chlodoric was murdered in the same campaign that also killed the Frankish king Chararic. Before, Clovis had killed king Ragnachar and his brothers. After all these murders, Gregory tells us, Clovis lamented that he had no family left anymore, implying that amongst his own casualties were close relatives.

She died in 530, aged about 45, in Vitry-en-Perthois, Aquitaine, France.
3768. CLOVIS I OF THE MEROVINGIANS (Howard Charles's forty-four-times-great-grandfather[3767], see Maternal Ancestry(205), Maternal Ancestry(208) and Maternal Ancestry(266)) was born in 466 to Childeric of Thuringia, and he succeeded his father in 481, at the age of fifteen. He conquered the remaining rump state of the Western Roman Empire at the Battle of Soissons (486), and by his death in 511 he had conquered much of the northern and western parts of what had formerly been Roman Gaul.

Clovis is important in the historiography of France as "the first king of what would become France". His name is Germanic, composed of the elements hlod ("fame") and wig ("combat"), and is the origin of the later French given name Louis, borne by 18 kings of France. Dutch, the most closely related modern language to Frankish, reborrowed the name as Lodewijk from German in the 12th century.

Clovis is also significant due to his conversion to Christianity in 496, largely at the behest of his wife, Clotilde, whom he would later venerate as a saint for this act, celebrated today in both the Roman Catholic Church and Eastern Orthodox Church. Clovis was later baptized on Christmas Day in AD 508. The adoption by Clovis of Catholicism (as opposed to the Arianism of some other Germanic tribes) led to widespread conversion among the Frankish peoples, to religious unification across modern-day France and Germany, and to Charlemagne's alliance with the Bishop of Rome three centuries later and the consequent birth of the early Holy Roman Empire.

The Frankish assassin and bandit Clovis marched into the city in 486. His name, pronounced with a hiss, is a contraction of 'Chlodovech', later to become 'Louis', the name of future kings. He was only twenty years old and had just beaten the Roman governor Syraugius in battle, humiliating his forces (prisoners were laughingly sodomized by the Frankish soldiers as a matter of routine). When his father had died in 481, Clovis had assumed command of the Salian Franks. He was then only sixteen, but already long blooded in battle. Now he controlled a city.

Clovis ran riot through the surrounding towns and villages, pillaging churches, stealing women. His wife, Clotilda, was a Christian, but he sneered at her faith, trusting the magical arts of the pagan gods over the Divine Power. The death of two sons in early infancy only hardened his scepticism about this religion of the meek. The most enduring legend about Clovis was actually invented in the seventeenth century by the historian Henri, comte de Boulainvilliers, and then taught to generations of French schoolchildren as an anti-mor-archist parable. ’The gory culminating point of the tale is that Clovis smashed open with an axe the head of a soldier on parade on the Champ de Mars, accusing him of clumsiness. This murder was also an act of revenge upon the same soldier, who had rebuked Clovis after an earlier battle for taking a vase (known as the vase of Soissons) as his own booty, arguing that treasure won in battle belonged to all who had fought. Clovis conceded the point there and then, but later took his revenge.

Although an invention, this was a highly symbolic anecdote, intended to illustrate the undisputed savagery and arrogance of the Franks. It also, as other commentators have pointed out, demonstrates a tendency in Parisian governments to match civil authority with military force, pointing to the absolutist regimes to come." Still, this was hardly yet a civilization but rather a new and rather fragile society, caught, in Flaubert's phrase, between 'the death of the old Gods and the coming of Christ'. For Clovis himself, the turning point in his career came in battle with the hated Alamanni, a Germanic tribe who, despite overwhelming strength in numbers, collapsed in the face of the Frankish onslaught. Clovis had made a vow to Saint Remi of Rheims that he would convert to Christianity if he managed to overcome such impossible odds. Under the influence of Genevieve (as we shall see, the most important political and religious figure of the time), he turned somewhat reluctantly towards God, if not to Christian charity, and became the first Christian king of Paris. His first significant action as sovereign, and with the most long-lasting consequences, was to declare... all Franks free men and all free men Franks. It is from this point on that the term 'frank' is associated not only with the territory of 'Francia', which would slowly but eventually become France, but also with the notion of being 'free'. (This is the meaning contained in the name of the rue des Francs-Bourgeois - translated by the drunken Jack Kerouac in the 1950s as 'the street of the outspoken middle-classes' - which runs parallel to the Seine through the present-day Marais. The street was given this name in the sixteenth century because it housed an almoner's lodge where forty-eight townspeople of diminished means could live free of tax - although given its current gentrified status, Kerouac's translation may indeed be nearer the mark.)

Clovis also established the 'Salic Law', which debarred women from inheriting land, and thereby the throne of France. Under the Franks, Paris was still not a huge town, yet it was the capital of a country. From this point on, it would occupy a defining and central place in the history of Francia.

3769. Eadgils, Adhel was a semi-legendary king of Sweden, who is estimated to have lived during the 6th century. Beowulf and Old Norse sources present him as the son of Ohthere and as belonging to the ruling Yngling (Scylding) dynasty. These sources also depict his war against Onela, which he won with foreign assistance: in Beowulf he gained the throne of Sweden by defeating his uncle Onela with Geatish help, and in two Scandinavian sources (Skáldskaparmál and Skjöldunga saga), he is also helped to defeat Onela in the Battle on the Ice of Lake Vänern, but with Danish help. However, Scandinavian sources mostly deal with his interaction with the legendary Danish king Hröðr Kraki (Hroðulf), and Eadgils is mostly presented in a negative light as a rich and greedy king.

According to Snorri Sturluson, Eadgils was buried in one of the royal mounds of Gamla Uppsala, and he is believed to be buried in Adils’ Mound (also known as the Western mound or Thor's mound) one of the largest mounds at Uppsala. An excavation in this mound showed that a man was buried there c. 575 on a bear skin with two dogs and rich grave offerings. There were luxurious weapons and other objects, both domestic and imported, that show that the buried man was very powerful. These remains include a Frankish sword adorned with gold and garnets and a board game with Roman pawns of ivory. He was dressed in a costly suit made of Frankish cloth with golden threads, and he wore a belt with a costly buckle. There were four cameos from the Middle East which were probably part of a casket. The finds show the distant contacts of the House of Yngling in the 6th century.

Sigobert I (The Lame) was a King of Cologne. He died (Murdered by his son Chloderic) in 509, aged about 64, in Buconian Forest, Germany.

Sigobert the Lame (also Sigibert or Sigebert) (died c. 509) was a king of the Franks in the area of Zülpich (Latin: Tolbiac) and Cologne. He was presumably wounded at the knee at the Battle of Tolbiac against the Alamanni.

According to Gregory of Tours, he was murdered by his son Chloderic upon the instigation of Clovis I, sometime after his victory on the Visigoths (507), when his son sent assassins upon him as he took a sojourn from his kingdom to a nearby forest. Chloderich then told Clovis of the murder and offered him the finest treasures of his newly inherited kingdom as a symbol of their new alliance. Clovis sent messengers to assess the treasure, who then asked Chlodoric to plunge his hand as deeply into his gold coins as possible. With his arm submerged, the envoys of Clovis then killed the new king in betrayal. Clovis then stood before the people of Chlodoric and told them that the son had sent assassins to murder his father; but that Chlodoric had subsequently met his own end as well. Clovis then offered his protection to the former subjects of Sigobert and Chlodoric, and thus became their king.

Gregory suggests that Chlodoric was murdered in the same campaign that killed the Frankish King Chararic. Before, Clovis had killed Ragnachar and his brothers. After all these murders, Gregory tells us that Clovis lamented that he had no family left, implying that among his own casualties were close relatives.

Saint Rusticus (c. 455 – 25 April 501) was the Archbishop of Lyon, since the year 494, the successor of Saint Lupicinus of Lyon (491-494). Later canonized, his feast day is 25 April. He was the son of Tallia (born 410) and her husband Aquilinus (c. 430-c. 470), nobleman at Lyon, a schoolfellow and friend of Sidonius Apollinaris (c. 400), who was a vicarius of a province in Gaul under the father of Sidonius between 423 and 448. He was the great-grandson of Decimus Rusticus and his wife Artemia, and also of Saint Eucherius and his wife Gallia. He was also the brother of St. Viventiolus.

Married before 480 to a daughter (born c. 460) of Ruricius, Bishop of Limoges (then Augustoritum) and his wife Omiance, they were the parents of three children:
- St. Sacerdos, Archbishop of Lyon
- Leontius, Archbishop of Lyon
- Artemia, the wife of Florentinus, born in 485, a Senator, who were the parents of:
  - Gondulf of Provence, Duke, Bishop of Metz
  - Arthemia, wife of Munderic Vitrey, Pretender of Austrasia

3778. OMMACE DE LIMOGES (Howard Charles's forty-five-times-great-grandmother[3777], see Maternal Ancestry(204), Maternal Ancestry(207) and Maternal Ancestry(265)) was born in 460, in Limoges, France. She is no longer living.

Rusticus of Lyon[3777] married Ommace de Limoges. They had one daughter:

Artemia of Lyon[3767] born in 485 in Geneva, Canton of Geneva, Switzerland; died in 530 in Vitry-en-Perthois, Aquitaine, France

3779. CHILDERIC OF THE MEROVINGIANS (Howard Charles's forty-five-times-great-grandfather[3778], see Maternal Ancestry(204), Maternal Ancestry(207) and Maternal Ancestry(265)) was born in 440 to Merovec of The Merovingians[3788] and Verica of The Franks[3789]. Childeric was a King of the Merovingians. He died in 481, aged about 41. He was buried in Church of Saint-Brice, Tournai, Belgium.

Childeric I, (died 481/482) king of the Salian Franks, one of the first of the Merovingians and the father of Clovis I. The Salian Franks, in treaty with the Roman Empire, had settled in Belgica Secunda, between the Meuse and Somme rivers, making their capital at Tournai. Childeric’s role as a barbarian ally of the Romans was important. He helped the Roman military commander Aegidius to repel the Visigoths near Orléans (463); at the request of Aegidius’ successor, Count Paulus, he attacked the Visigoths again in 469. Soon afterward he cleared Anglo-Saxon pirates from the district southwest of Orléans around Angers.

3780. BASINA VAN THURINGEN (Howard Charles's forty-five-times-great-grandmother[3779], see Maternal Ancestry(204), Maternal Ancestry(208) and Maternal Ancestry(266)) was born in 438, in Saxon Tribal Lands, [Wittenberg, Saxony-Anhalt, Germany], to Clodiusvi of The Salic Franks[3790] and Verica of The Franks[3791]. She died on 28 November 470, aged about 32, in Kingdom of the Thuringii, [Free State of Thuringia, Germany].

Basina was a daughter of the Thuringian king Basin and Basina, a Saxon princess. She left her husband, king Bisinus and went to Roman Gaul. She herself took the initiative to ask for the hand of Childeric I, king of the Franks, and married him. For as she herself said, "I want to have the most powerful man in the world, even if I have to cross the ocean for him". This remark of hers may have been related to Childeric's successful invasion of the Roman Empire and his attempt to settle a Frankish kingdom on Roman soil.

She is the mother of the man who is remembered as the founder of the Frankish realm and modern France. She (not her husband Childeric) named her son Chlodovech, but he is better remembered under his Latinized name, Clovis I. The simple fact that Chlodovech's name was chosen and given by Basina is remarkable since it was a common practice for the Franks to name a son after a member of the family of the male-line of ancestors.
Through the ages historians have been intrigued by the story of Basina since she obviously acted as a player and not as bystander — which is not uncommon for women of the German clans, but highly uncommon for the Romans.

Childeric of The Merovingians[3779] married Basina van Thuringen. They had one son:

Clov I of The Merovingians[3768] born in 466; died on 27 November 511

3781. CHILPERIC II DE BOURGOGNE (Howard Charles's forty-five-times-great-grandfather[3780], see Maternal Ancestry(204), Maternal Ancestry(205), Maternal Ancestry(208) and Maternal Ancestry(266)) was born in 450, in Bourgogne, Marne, Champagne-Ardenne, France, to Gondahar de Bourgogne[3792] and Clothilde van Visigothen[3793]. Chilperic II was a King of Burgundy. He died in 493, aged about 43, in Attigny, France. He was buried in Noyon, France.

Chilperic II (Latin: Chilperikus; c. 450–493 AD) was the King of Burgundy from 473 until his death, though initially co-ruler with his father Gondioc from 463. He began his reign in 473 after the partition of Burgundy with his younger brothers Godegisel, Gundobad, and Godomar; he ruled from Valenta Julia (Valence) and his brothers ruled respectively from Geneva, Vienne, and Lyon. Sometime in the early 470s Chilperic was forced to submit to the authority of the Roman Empire by the magister militum Ecdicius Avitus. In 475 he probably sheltered an exiled Ecdicius after the Visigoths had obtained possession of the Auvergne. After his brother Gundobad had removed his other brother Godomar (Gundomar) in 486, he turned on Chilperic. In 493 Gundobad assassinated Chilperic and drowned his wife, then exiled their two daughters, Chroma, who became a nun, and Clotilda, who fled to her uncle, Godegisel. When the Frankish king, Clovis I, requested the latter's hand in marriage, Gundobad was unable to decline. Clovis and Godegisel allied against Gundobad in a long, drawn-out civil war.

3782. CARÉTÈNE AGRIPPINA VAN ZWABEN (Howard Charles's forty-five-times-great-grandmother[3781], see Maternal Ancestry(204), Maternal Ancestry(205), Maternal Ancestry(208) and Maternal Ancestry(266)) was born in 445, in Bourgogne, France. She died (Drowned by her brother-in-law King Gundobad, after he tied a stone around her neck) in 492, aged about 47, in Lyon, France.

Chilperic II de Bourgogne[3781], aged about 10, married Carétène Agrippina van Zwaben, aged about 15, in 460. They had two daughters:

Clotilde de Bourgogne[3769] born in 475 in Bourgogne, Marne, Champagne-Ardenne, France; died on 3 June 545 in Tours, Puy-de-Dome, Auvergne, France

Chroma of Burgundy[3765] born in 480 in Vity, Nieve, Bourgogne, France; died on 3 June 565 in Tours, Puy-de-Dome, Auvergne, France

3783. THEODEMIR OF THE OSTROGOTHS (Howard Charles's forty-five-times-great-grandfather[3782], see Maternal Ancestry(205), Maternal Ancestry(210) and Maternal Ancestry(268)) was born in 425, in Hun Empire, Ukraine. Theodemir was a King of the Ostrogoths. He died in 474, aged about 49, in Pannonia, Hun Empire, Ukraine.

3784. ERELEUVA EUSEBIA OF THE OSTROGOTHS (Howard Charles's forty-five-times-great-grandmother[3783], see Maternal Ancestry(205), Maternal Ancestry(210) and Maternal Ancestry(268)) was born in 425, in Verona, Veneto, Italy. Ereleuva Eusebia was a Queen of the Ostrogoths. She died in 500, aged about 75, in Hun Empire, Ukraine. Theodemir of The Ostrogoths[3783] married Ereleuva Eusebia of The Ostrogoths. They had one daughter:

Amalafrida of The Ostrogoths[3773] born in 468 in Carthage, now, Tunis, Tunisia
48th Generation of Ancestors

3785. OHTHAR EGILSSON (Howard Charles's forty-six-times-great-grandfather[3784], see Maternal Ancestry(136), Maternal Ancestry(202) and Maternal Ancestry(252)) was born in 551, in Upsala, Svitjod, Sweden, to Egil Vendikraka Aunsson[3794]. Othtar was a King of Uppsala, Sweden (Viking). He died in 576, aged about 25, in Vendsyssel, Sønderborg, Syddanmark, Denmark.

Ohthere (also Ohtere), king of Sweden of the house of Scylfings who would have lived during the 6th century (fl. c. 515 – c. 530.

A prince of the Swedes, Ohthere and his brother Onela conducted successful raids against the Geats after King Hræthel had died. In 515, Öngentheow was killed in battle by the Geats and Ohthere succeeded his father as the king of Sweden. Ohthere led an army against the Geats, and besieged one of their armies. He nearly killed the Geatish king Hygelac but lost many of his forces in the conflict. Ohthere managed to get back to Sweden. In the 520s, Ohthere led a large raid to Denmark and plundered the Danish coast. A Danish army led by two Jarls, however, was waiting for him. Battle broke out. The Danish were reinforced, and Ohthere was killed in the battle. His corpse was taken back to Sweden and buried in a mound.

Ohthar fathered one son:

Eadgils The Great Ottarsson[3774] born in 572 in Uppsala, Sweden; died in 594 in Uppsala, Sweden

3786. CHILDEBERT OF COLOGNE (Howard Charles's forty-six-times-great-grandfather[3785], see Maternal Ancestry(204), Maternal Ancestry(207) and Maternal Ancestry(264)) was born in 425, in Cologne, Germany, to Clodius V of The Franks[3797] and Hildegonde van Keulen[3798]. Childebert was a King of the Riparian Franks. He died in 483, aged about 58.

Merovec (Latin: Meroveus or Merovius) (d. 453/457) is the semi-legendary founder of the Merovingian dynasty of the Salian Franks (although Chlodio may in fact be the founder), which later became the dominant Frankish tribe. His name is close to Marwig, lit. "famed fight" (cf. māri "famous" + wīg "fight", compare modern Dutch mare "news, rumour" and vermaard "famous"). He is said to be one of several barbarian warlords and kings that joined forces with the Roman general Aetius against the Huns under Attila on the Catalaunian fields in Gaul. The first Frankish royal dynasty called themselves Merovingians ("descendants of Merovec") after him, although no other historical evidence exists that Merovec ever lived. It has been suggested that Merovec refers to the Dutch river Merwede, once called Merwe or Merowe. Although this river was historically a main subsidiary of the Rhine, in modern times it is a tributary of the Rhine-Meuse-Scheldt delta; the area where, according to Roman historians, the Salian Franks once dwelled.

His name is also close to Marwig, lit. "famed fight" (compare modern Dutch mare "news, rumour"/vermaard "famous" as well as (ge)vecht "fight" with -vech).

The legend about Merovec's conception was adapted in 1982 by authors Henry Lincoln and Richard Leigh in their book Holy Blood Holy Grail, as the seed of a new idea. They hypothesized that this "descended from a fish" legend was actually referring to the concept that the Merovingian line had married into the bloodline of Jesus Christ, since the symbol for early Christians had also been a fish. This theory, with no other basis than Lincoln and Leigh's concoction, was further popularized in 2003 via Dan Brown's bestselling novel, The Da Vinci Code.
3789. VERICA OF THE FRANKS (Howard Charles's forty-six-times-great-grandmother[3788], see Maternal Ancestry(205), Maternal Ancestry(208) and Maternal Ancestry(266)) was born in 419, in Westphalia, Germany. She died in 449, aged about 30.
Merovec of The Merovingians[3788] married Verica of The Franks. They had one son:
Childeric of The Merovingians[3779] born in 440; died in 481

3790. CLODIUSVI OF THE SALIC FRANKS (Howard Charles's forty-six-times-great-grandfather[3789], see Maternal Ancestry(205), Maternal Ancestry(208) and Maternal Ancestry(266)) was born in 418, in Cologne, Nordrhein-Westphalen, Germany, to Clodius V of The Franks[3797] and Hildegonde van Keulen[3798]. Clodiusvi was a King of the Salic Franks. He died in 450, aged about 32, in Cambrai, France.

3791. BASINA DER SAKSEN (Howard Charles's forty-six-times-great-grandmother[3790], see Maternal Ancestry(205), Maternal Ancestry(208) and Maternal Ancestry(266)) was born in 408. She died in 476, aged about 68.
Clodiusvi of The Salic Franks[3790] married Basina der Saksen. They had one daughter:

Gundohar was the son of Gebicca and followed them as king. The Burgundians had in 407, when several Germanic peoples the Rhine limit exceeded sided with the British usurper Constantine III instead of the legitimate emperor Honorius. When Constantine III 411 at Arles was defeated she initially supported the new usurper Iovinus but prostrated themselves when Iovinus Honorius in 413 was defeated. Honorius was able to bind to the Burgundians themselves through a foederati treaty. The Burgundians were charged with the defense of the Rhine frontier from the Alps to Metz and were allowed to settle permanently along the Upper Rhine in the Roman province of Germania Superior. Gundohar had a large degree of autonomy. He founded near Worms and the Burgundian Empire when the Roman power continued to decline in importance.
Eventually Gundohar defined in 435 the treaty with the Romans and attacked the surrounding area within Roman. In response, the Roman general sent a punitive expedition to the Burgundians, consisting mainly of Huns. King Gundohar killed near Worms in a battle against the Huns. A large part of Gundohars people and his entire family was massacred.
Siegfried Legend
Stories about him have appeared in Latin, Norse, Germanic and Old English texts. The best-known stories in which Gundohar occurs are the Nibelungenlied and Thidrekssaga. It is his relationship to the hero Siegfried central, betrayal by Flavius Aetius and Attila the Hun and his eventual death of Attila the Hun court.

Chlodio (c. 392/395–445/448; also spelled Clodio, Clodius, Clodio or Chlogio) was a king of the Salian Franks from the Merovingian dynasty. He was known as the Long-Haired King and lived in Thuringian territory, at the castle of Duisburg. He became chief of the Thérouanne area in 414 AD. From there, he invaded the Roman Empire in 428, defeating a Roman force at Cambrai, and settled in Northern Gaul, where other groups of Saliens were already settled. Although he was attacked by the Romans, he was able to maintain his position and, 3 years later in 431, he extended his kingdom south to the Somme River in the future Francia. In AD 448, 20 years after his reign began, Chlodio was defeated at Vicus Helena in Artois by Flavius Aëtius, the commander of the Roman army in Gaul.

Like all Merovingian kings, Chlodio had long hair as a ritual custom. His successor may have been Merovech, after whom the dynasty was named 'Merovingian'. The non-contemporary Liber Historiae Francorum says his father was Pharamond, whom many believe to have been a legendary person linked to the lineage sometime in the 8th century. The Chronicle of Frédegard makes Chlodio son of Theudemeres, one of the leaders of the Salian Franks and king of Thérouanne (409–414).

(c. 370 – 15 August 415) was king of the Visigoths from 411 to 415. During his reign, he transformed the Visigothic state from a tribal kingdom to a major political power of Late Antiquity. He was unanimously elected to the throne to succeed his brother-in-law Alaric, who had been struck down by a fever suddenly in Calabria. King Ataulf's first act was to halt Alaric's southward expansion of the Goths in Italy.

In Hispania, Ataulf imprudently accepted into his service one of the late Sarus' followers, unaware that the man harbored a secret desire to avenge the death of his beloved patron. And so, in the palace at Barcelona, the man brought Ataulf's reign to a sudden end by killing him while he bathed.

Sigeric, the brother of Sarus, immediately became king—for a mere seven days, when he was also murdered and succeeded by Wallia. Under the latter's reign, Galla Placidia was returned to Ravenna where, in 417, at the urging of Honorius, she remarried, her new husband being the implacable enemy of the Goths, Constantius.

GALLA PlACIDIA OF ROME (Howard Charles's forty-seven-times-great-grandmother[3799], see Maternal Ancestry(204), Maternal Ancestry(205), Maternal Ancestry(208) and Maternal Ancestry(266)) was born in 390, in Constantinople, to Theodosius I of Rome[3808] and Galla Flavius Theodosius of Rome[3809]. Athanaric or Atanaric (Gothic: Aþanareiks presumably from aþni "year" and reiks "king"; Latin: Athanaricus; died 381) was king of several branches of the Thervingian Goths for at least two decades in the 4th century. Athanaric made his first appearance in recorded history in 369, when he engaged in battle with the Eastern Roman Emperor Valens and ultimately negotiated a favorable peace for his people. During his reign, many Thervings had converted to Arian Christianity, which Athanaric vehemently opposed, fearing that Christianity would destroy Gothic culture. According to the report of Sozomenos, more than 300 Christians were killed in Athanaric’s persecution during the 370s.

Fritigern, Athanaric’s rival, was an Arian and had the favor of Valens, who shared his religious beliefs. In the early 370s, Athanaric successively fought Fritigern in a civil war, only to later be defeated by the invading Huns. Temporarily fleeing to Caucaland in the Carpathians, Athanaric was warmly received by Theodosius in Constantinople in 381, where he signed a treaty of friendship with the Eastern Roman Empire.

Socrates Scholasticus, Sozomen, and Zosimus refer to conflicts between Fritigern and Athanaric. Ammianus Marcellinus and Philostorgius do not record such conflicts. According to Socrates, Fritigern and Athanaric were rival leaders of the (Therving) Goths. As this rivalry grew into warfare, Athanaric gained the advantage, and Fritigern asked for Roman aid. The Emperor Valens and the Thracian field army intervened, Valens and Fritigern defeated Athanaric, and Fritigern converted to Christianity, following the same teachings as Valens followed. Sozomen follows Socrates’ account.

According to Zosimus, Athanaric (Athomaricus) was the king of the Goths (Scythians). Sometime after their victory at Adrianople, and after the accession of Theodosius, Fritigern, Alatheus, and Saphrax moved north of the Danube and defeated Athanaric, before returning south of the Danube.

In 376, Valens permitted Fritigern's people to cross the Danube River and settle on Roman soil to avoid the Huns, who had recently conquered the Greuthungs and were now pressing the Thervings then living in Dacia. Athanaric’s people were left to their fate, but many of them found their own way across the river, as well. In 381, Athanaric unexpectedly came to the East Roman capital of Constantinople. According to Jordanes, he negotiated a peace with the new emperor, Theodosius I, that made some Thervings foederati, or official allies of Rome allowed to settle on Roman soil as a state within a state.[6] Orosius (Historiae adversum paganos 7, 34) and Zosimus (New History 4, 34, 3-5) affirm this, but another source, Ammianus Marcellinus (Res gestae 27, 5, 10) tells us an entirely different story. According to him, Athanaric was banished by his fellow tribesmen and forced to seek asylum on the Roman territory. Cf. Themistius (oratio 15, 190-1), who likewise describes Athanaric as a supplicant and a refugee. Clearly, Athanaric was by then no authority to negotiate with; he was welcomed by Theodosius in Constantinople only because the Emperor wished to make a lasting impression on the Tervingi, who were still fighting the Romans. A few weeks later, Athanaric died. A peace and a treaty with those Tervingi (or Visigoths), who still fought the Romans in Thrace, was concluded in 382 and it lasted until Theodosius' death in 395.

3808. EMPEROR THEODOSIUS I OF ROME (Howard Charles's forty-eight-times-great-grandfather[3807], see Maternal Ancestry(205), Maternal Ancestry(208), Maternal Ancestry(266) and Maternal Ancestry(272)) was born on 11 January 347, in Cauca, Gallaccia, Spain, to Flavius Honoris Theodosius "The Elder" of Rome[3816] and Thermantia of Rome[3817]. Theodosius I became known as ‘The Great’. The Great was an Emperor of Rome. He died on 17 January 395, aged 48, in Milano, Lombardy, Italy.
Theodosius I (Latin: Flavius Theodosius Augustus;[1] 11 January 347 – 17 January 395), also known as Theodosius the Great, was Roman Emperor from AD 379 to AD 395. Theodosius was the last emperor to rule over both the eastern and the western halves of the Roman Empire. On accepting his elevation, he campaigned against Goths and other barbarians who had invaded the empire. He failed to kill, expel, or entirely subjugate them, and after the Gothic War, they established a homeland south of the Danube, in Illyricum, within the empire's borders. He fought two destructive civil wars, in which he defeated the usurpers Magnus Maximus and Eugenius at great cost to the power of the empire. He also issued decrees that effectively made orthodox Nicene Christianity the official state church of the Roman Empire. He neither prevented nor punished the destruction of prominent Hellenistic temples of classical antiquity, including the Temple of Apollo in Delphi and the Serapeum in Alexandria. He dissolved the order of the Vestal Virgins in Rome. In 393, he banned the pagan rituals of the Olympics in Ancient Greece. After his death, Theodosius' young sons Arcadius and Honorius inherited the east and west halves respectively, and the Roman Empire was never again re-united, though Byzantine emperors after Zeno would claim the united title after Julius Nepos' death in 480 AD.

3809. GALLA FLAVIUS THEODOSIUS OF ROME (Howard Charles's forty-eight-times-great-grandmother[3808], see Maternal Ancestry(205), Maternal Ancestry(208), Maternal Ancestry(266) and Maternal Ancestry(272)) was born in 365, in Cauca, Spain, to Valentinian of Rome[3818] and Justina Flavia of Rome[3819]. She died in 394, aged about 29, in Rome, Italy.

Flavia Galla (died 394 CE) was an Empress of the Roman Empire and a Princess of the Western Roman Empire. She was the second Empress consort of Theodosius I. She was daughter of Valentinian I and his second wife Justina.

Flavius Richomeres was a Frank who lived in the late 4th century. He took service in the Roman army and made a career as comes, magister militum, and consul. He was an uncle of the general Arbogastes. He is possibly to be identified with the Richomeres who married Asycyla, whose son Theodemir later became king of the Franks.

Around the years 377/378, Richomeres was Comes domesticorum of Emperor Gratian and was transferred from Gaul to Thracia, where he was involved in the Gothic wars of Emperor Valens. At Adrianople he tried to persuade Valens to wait on Gratian for support. When the Gothic leader Fritigern demanded hostages to secure peace from the Romans he volunteered and departed the Roman camp to bring the other hostages to Fritigern, but before he arrived some elements of the two armies got out of control and engaged, starting the famous Battle of Adrianople. Richomeres ended up at a battlefield in complete chaos but he saved himself by withdrawing and survived. However, Valens' army was largely destroyed and many officers fell, including Valens himself.

Around 383 he was general in the east (magister militum per orientem) and became consul in 384. In 388 Theodosius I sent him together with his nephew Arbogastes and Promotus and Timasius against the usurper Magnus Maximus, who was defeated.

From the year 388 he served as supreme commander in the Eastern portion of the Empire (comes et magister utriusque militiae) until his death in 393. Richomeres was interested in literature and was acquainted with rhetoricians such as Libanius and Augustinus. He introduced the rhetorician Eugenius to his nephew Arbogastes. A few years later Arbogastes seized power in the western portions of the Empire. After the death of Valentinian II, Arbogastes promoted Eugenius to be his Emperor, while he himself remained the leader and generalissimo. In 393 Theodosius I organised a campaign against Arbogastes, and Richomeres was asked to lead the cavalry against his nephew. On the way from the East to the West he died before the battle took place. Arbogastes lost the battle and committed suicide with his own sword.

Alaric I (Gothic: Alareiks - "supreme chief/ruler"[citation needed]; Latin: Alaricus; 370 (or 375) – 410 AD) was the first King of the Visigoths from 395–410, son (or paternal grandson) of chieftain Rothestes. Alaric is best known for his sack of Rome in 410, which marked a decisive event in the decline of the Roman Empire.

Alaric began his career under the Gothic soldier Gainas and later joined the Roman army. Alaric's first appearance was as the leader of a mixed band of Goths and allied peoples who invaded Thrace in 391 and were stopped by the half-Vandal Roman General Stilicho. In 394 he led a Gothic force of 20,000 that helped the Eastern Roman Emperor Theodosius defeat the Frankish usurper Arbogast at the Battle of Frigidus. Despite sacrificing around 10,000 of his men, Alaric received little recognition from the Emperor. Disappointed, he left the army and was elected reiks of the Visigoths in 395, and marched toward Constantinople until he was diverted by Roman forces. He then moved southward into Greece, where he sacked Piraesus (the port of Athens) and destroyed Corinth, Megara, Argos, and Sparta. As a response, the Eastern emperor Flavius Arcadius appointed Alaric magister militum ("master of the soldiers") in Illyricum.

In 401 Alaric invaded Italy, but he was defeated by Stilicho at Pollentia (modern Pollenza) on April 6, 402. A second invasion that same year also ended in defeat at the Battle of Verona, though Alaric forced the Roman Senate to pay a large subsidy to the Visigoths. During Radagaisus' Italian invasion in 406, Alaric remained idle in Illyria. In 408, Western Emperor Flavius Honorius ordered the execution of Stilicho and his family, amid rumours that the general had made a deal with Alaric. Honorius then incited the Roman population to massacre tens of thousands of wives and children of foederati Goths serving in the Roman military. Subsequently, around 30,000 Gothic soldiers defected to Alaric, and joined his march on Rome to avenge their murdered families.

Moving swiftly along Roman roads, Alaric sacked the cities of Aquileia and Cremona and ravaged the lands along the Adriatic Sea. The Visigothic leader thereupon laid siege to Rome in 408. Eventually, the Senate granted him a substantial subsidy. In addition, Alaric forced the Senate to liberate all 40,000 Gothic slaves in Rome. Honorius, however, refused to appoint Alaric as the commander of the Western Roman Army, and in 409 the Visigoths again surrounded Rome. Alaric lifted his blockade after proclaiming Attalus Western Emperor. Attalus appointed him magister utriusque militiae ("master of both services") but refused to allow him to send an army into Africa. Negotiations with Honorius broke down, and Alaric deposed Attalus in the summer of 410, and besieged Rome for the third time. Allies within the capital opened the gates for him on August 24, and for three days his troops sacked the city. Although the Visigoths plundered Rome, they treated its inhabitants humanely and burned only a few buildings. Having abandoned a plan to occupy Sicily and North Africa after the destruction of his fleet in a storm, Alaric died as the Visigoths were marching northward.

Alaric sacked Rome three times. Alaric, having penetrated the city, marched southwards into Calabria. He desired to invade Africa, which, thanks to its grain, had become the key to holding Italy. But a storm battered his ships into pieces and many of his soldiers drowned. Alaric died soon after in Cosenza, probably of fever,[7] and his body was, according to legend, buried under the riverbed of the Busento in accordance with the pagan practices of the Visigothic people. The stream was temporarily turned aside from its course while the grave was dug wherein the Gothic chief and some of his most precious spoils were interred. When the work was finished, the river was turned back into its usual channel and the captives by whose hands the labor had been accomplished were put to death that none might learn their secret.

Alaric was succeeded in the command of the Gothic army by his brother-in-law, Ataulf, who married Honorius' sister Galla Placidia three years later.

Count Theodosius (Latin: Comes Theodosius) was a senior military officer serving in the Western Roman Empire. He is also known as Flavius Theodosius or as Theodosius the Elder, distinguishing him from his son, the Roman emperor Theodosius I. He was granted the title of Count of the Britains (Comes Britanniarum) for his work there putting down the Great Conspiracy. He afterwards fought against the Alemanni and in Mauretania. There is some evidence that Flavius Theodosius's father was called Flavius Julius Honorius, and his uncles Flavius Julius Gerontius and Flavius Julius Eucherius. He himself was called Flavius Julius Theodosius, claimed descending from the gens Julia through Gaius Julius Caesar's cousin Sextus Julius Caesar. Probably sometime in the late 330s or early 340s he married Flavia Thermantia. By her, he had at least two sons, Honorius and Theodosius (afterwards Emperor Theodosius I), born at Cauca (modern Coca, Segovia) in Spain. The family were Orthodox Christians.

Valentinian I (Latin: Flavius Valentinianus Augustus;[1] 321 – 17 November 375), also known as Valentinian the Great, was Roman emperor from 364 to 375. Upon becoming emperor he made his brother Valens his co-emperor, giving him rule of the eastern provinces while Valentinian retained the west. During his reign, Valentinian fought successfully against the Alamanni, Quadi, and Sarmatians. Most notable was his victory over the Alamanni in 367 at the Battle of Solinicum. His brilliant general Count Theodosius defeated a revolt in Africa and the Great Conspiracy, a coordinated assault on Roman Britain by Picts, Scots, and Saxons. Valentinian was also the last emperor to conduct campaigns across both the Rhine and Danube rivers. Valentinian rebuilt and improved the fortifications along the frontiers, even building fortresses in enemy territory. Due to the successful nature of his reign and the rapid decline of the empire after his death, he is often considered to be the "last great western emperor". He founded the Valentinian Dynasty, with his sons Gratian and Valentinian II succeeding him in the western half of the empire.

Justina (born circa 340, died circa 391) was the second wife of the Roman Emperor Valentinian I (reigned 364–375) and the mother of Valentinian II (reigned 375–392). Galla, Grata and Justa. Justina was a daughter of Justus, governor of Picenum under Constantius II. According to Socrates of Constantinople: "Justus the father of Justina, who had been governor of Picenum under the reign of Constantius, had a dream in which he seemed to himself to bring forth the imperial purple out of his right side. When this dream had been told to many persons, it at length came to the knowledge of Constantius, who conjecturing it to be a presage that a descendant of Justus would become emperor, caused him to be assassinated.".

   Licinius I (Latin: Gaius Valerius Licinianus Licinius Augustus; c. 263–325) was a Roman emperor from 308 to 324. For most of his reign he was the colleague and rival of Constantine I, with whom he co-authored the Edict of Milan that granted official toleration to Christians in the Roman Empire. He was finally defeated at the Battle of Chrysopolis, before being executed on the orders of Constantine I.

   Born to a Dacian peasant family in Moesia Superior, Licinius accompanied his close childhood friend, the future emperor Galerius, on the Persian expedition in 298. He was trusted enough by Galerius that in 307 he was sent as an envoy to Maxentius in Italy to attempt to reach some agreement about the latter's illegitimate political position. Galerius then trusted the eastern provinces to Licinius when he went to deal with Maxentius personally after the death of Flavius Valerius Severus.

   Constantine had him hanged, accusing him of conspiring to raise troops among the barbarians. His memory was branded with infamy: his statues were thrown down; and by edict, all his laws and judicial proceedings during his reign were abolished.

3831. FLAVIA JULIA CONSTANTIA OF ROME (Howard Charles's fifty-one-times-great-grandmother[3830], see Maternal Ancestry(208), Maternal Ancestry(272), Maternal Ancestry(278) and Maternal Ancestry(298)) was born in 270, in Eboracum, England, to Constantius I Chlorus of Rome[3832] and Flavia Maximiana Theodora of Rome[3833]. Flavia Julia Constantia was an Empress of Rome. She died in 330, aged about 60, in Rome, Italy.

   Gaius Valerius Licinianus of Rome[3830], aged about 39, married Flavia Julia Constantia of Rome, aged about 33, in 303 in Milan, Lombardia, Italy. They had one son:
   Gratianus Major of Rome[3824] born in 300 in Cibalae (Vinkovci), in southern Pannonia Secunda (modern Croatia); died in 367 in Pyrénées, Saint Andrew, Grenada, Spain

3832. CONSTANTIUS I CHLORUS OF ROME (Howard Charles's fifty-one-times-great-grandfather[3831], see Maternal Ancestry(208), Maternal Ancestry(272), Maternal Ancestry(278), Maternal Ancestry(278) and Maternal Ancestry(299)) was born on 31 March 250, in Dardania (Moesia Superior). Constantius I Chlorus was an Emperor of Rome. He died on 25 July 306, aged 56, in Eboracum, Yorkshire, England. He was buried in Saint Helen's, York, Yorkshire, England.

Constantius I Chlorus married twice. He was married to Flavia Maximiana Theodora of Rome[3833] and Helena of Nicomedia[3834].

Constantius I (Latin: Marcus Flavius Valerius Constantius Herculius Augustus; 31 March c. 250 – 25 July 306) was Roman Emperor from 293 to 306, commonly known as Constantius Chlorus literally "Constantius the Pale". He was the father of Constantine the Great and founder of the Constantinian dynasty. As Caesar, he defeated the usurper Allectus in Britain and campaigned extensively along the Rhine frontier, defeating the Alamanni and Franks. Upon becoming Augustus in 305, Constantius launched a successful punitive campaign against the Picts beyond the Antonine Wall. However, Constantius died suddenly in Eboracum (York) the following year. His death sparked the collapse of the tetrarchic system of government inaugurated by the Emperor Diocletian.

In 305 Constantius crossed over into Britain, travelled to the far north of the island and launched a military expedition against the Picts, claiming a victory against them and the title Britannicus Maximus II by 7 January 306. After retiring to Eboracum (York) for the winter, Constantius had planned to continue the campaign, but on 25 July 306, he died. As he was dying, Constantius recommended his son to the army as his successor; consequently Constantine was declared emperor by the legions at York.

3833. FLAVIA MAXIMIANA THEODORA OF ROME (Howard Charles's fifty-one-times-great-grandmother[3832], see Maternal Ancestry(208), Maternal Ancestry(272), Maternal Ancestry(278), Maternal Ancestry(278) and Maternal Ancestry(299)) was born in 289, in Rome, Italy, to Marcus Aurelius Valerius Maximianus Augustus[3838] and Eutropia of Syria[3839]. Flavia Maximiana Theodora was an Empress of Rome. She died in 328, aged about 39.

Flavia Maximiana Theodora, also known as Theodora, was a Roman Empress, wife of Constantius Chlorus. She is often referred to as a stepdaughter of Emperor Maximian by ancient sources, leading to claims by historians Otto Seeck and Ernest Stein that she was born from an earlier marriage between Eutropia, wife of Maximian, and Afranius Hannibalianus. This man was consul in 292 and praetorian prefect under Diocletian. In 293[citation needed], Theodora married Flavius Valerius Julius Constantius (later known as Constantius Chlorus), after he had divorced from his first wife, Helena, to strengthen his political position. The couple had six children:

Flavius Dalmatius;
Julius Constantius, father of Roman Emperor Julian and of the unnamed wife of Constantius II;
Hannibalianus (must have died before the imperial purges that occurred in 337 because he is not listed among its victims);
Anastasia, who was to marry Bassianus;
Flavia Julia Constantia, wife of Roman Emperor Licinius;
Eutropia, mother of Nepotianus.

Constantius I Chlorus of Rome[3832] married Flavia Maximiana Theodora of Rome. They had two daughters: Flavia Julia Constantia of Rome[3831] born in 270 in Eboracum, England; died in 330 in Rome, Italy

Fausta of Rome[3825] born in 305 in Rome, Italy; died in 330 in Ravenna, Emilia-Romagna, Italy

3834. HELENA OF NICOMEDIA (Howard Charles's fifty-one-times-great-grandfather's wife[3836]) was born in 250. She died in 330, aged about 80.
Constantius I Chlorus of Rome[3832] married Helena of Nicomedia.

Maximian (Latin: Marcus Aurelius Valerius Maximianus Herculius Augustus; c. 250 – c. July 310[7]) was Roman Emperor from 286 to 305. He was Caesar from 285 to 286, then Augustus from 286 to 305. He shared the latter title with his co-emperor and superior, Diocletian, whose political brain complemented Maximian's military brawn. Maximian established his residence at Trier but spent most of his time on campaign. In the late summer of 285, he suppressed rebels in Gaul known as the Bagaudae. From 285 to 288, he fought against Germanic tribes along the Rhine frontier. Together with Diocletian, he launched a scorched earth campaign deep into Alamannic territory in 288, temporarily relieving the Rhine provinces from the threat of Germanic invasion.

The man he appointed to police the Channel shores, Carausius, rebelled in 286, causing the secession of Britain and northwestern Gaul. Maximian failed to oust Carausius, and his invasion fleet was destroyed by storms in 289 or 290. Maximian's subordinate, Constantius, campaigned against Carausius' successor, Allectus, while Maximian held the Rhine frontier. The rebel leader was ousted in 296, and Maximian moved south to combat piracy near Hispania and Berber incursions in Mauretania. When these campaigns concluded in 298, he departed for Italy, where he lived in comfort until 305. At Diocletian's behest, Maximian abdicated on May 1, 305, gave the Augustan office to Constantius, and retired to southern Italy.

In late 306, Maximian took the title of Augustus again and aided his son Maxentius' rebellion in Italy. In April 307, he attempted to depose his son, but failed and fled to the court of Constantius' successor, Constantine (who was both Maximian's step-grandson and also his son-in-law), in Trier. At the Council of Carnuntum in November 308, Diocletian and his successor, Gallerus, forced Maximian to renounce his imperial claim again. In early 310, Maximian attempted to seize Constantine's title while the emperor was on campaign on the Rhine. Few supported him, and he was captured by Constantine in Marseille. Maximian committed suicide in the summer of 310 on Constantine's orders. During Constantine's war with Maxentius, Maximian's image was purged from all public places. However, after Constantine ousted and killed Maxentius, Maximian's image was rehabilitated, and he was deified.

The Cole family, referred to as the Cole race, ruled the biggest area of Britain (which at that time consisted of a combined England, Scotland and Wales) which encompassed present day Southern Scotland, Lancashire, Yorkshire, Northumberland and Cumbria. This compared with Wales which was split into five regions and extended east to Lichfield and the rest of Britain consisting of dozens of kingdoms.

The arrival and subsequent departure of the Romans did not much alter the Cole dynasty and it was the Danes and Saxons who eventually wiped them out, being completed by about 616. Cole is the origin of the traditional song “Old King Cole”.

Marius (Welsh: Mayric) was a legendary king of the Britons during the time of the Roman occupation of Britain, as recounted in Geoffrey of Monmouth's pseudohistorical Historia Regum Britanniae. He was the son of King Arvirargus and ruled following his father's death.

According to Geoffrey, he ruled wisely in the time when the Picts first came to Britain. A fleet of ships under the leadership of Sodric came from Scythia and landed in Albany. Once there, they began to destroy the lands and Marius was forced to react. Following numerous battles, Marius killed Sodric and set up a stone there to remember that triumph. In addition, that land became known as Westmorland after him. In respect for the people he defeated, he gave them a small portion of Albany called Caithness to live in. Marius refused, however, to give them women to marry so the Picts fled to Ireland and took wives there.

Marius established close ties with Rome and good diplomacy through tribute and respect of the Roman citizens in Britain. He followed the laws of his ancestors and ruled the justly. When he died, he was succeeded by his son, Coilus.

Following the defeat of the British chief Winstan Caractacus in 52 A.D. by the legions of Rome, his cousin Arviragus quickly reorganized the Silurian forces and struck back at the Romans with a fury seldom witnessed before. Prince of the noble Silures of Britain, who lived mainly in the counties of Monmouth, Brecon and Glamorgan, Arviragus was the son of King Cunobelinus -- the Cymbeline of Shakespeare. Together with his cousin Caractacus, he represented the Royal Silurian dynasty, the most powerful warrior kingdom in the isles of Britain. From this warrior king the Tudor kings and queens of England had their descent.

Venissa (Genissa, Genvissa, Genuissa), according to Geoffrey of Monmouth's 12th century Historia Regum Britanniae, was a daughter of the Roman Emperor Claudius, whom he gave in marriage to the British king Arvirargus once he had submitted to Rome. According to Geoffrey's account she was very beautiful, and so enchanted Arvirargus that he preferred her company to anyone else's. He founded Gloucester, supposedly named after Claudius, in her honour. When Arvirargus fell out with Rome and Vespasian was sent to enforce a reconciliation, Venissa acted as mediator between them. Venissa cannot be considered historical. She is not mentioned in authentic Roman history; her supposed husband Arvirargus is known only from a cryptic reference in a 2nd-century satirical poem by Juvenal; and it is in any case inconceivable that a daughter, even an illegitimate daughter, of a Roman emperor could be given in marriage to a barbarian without attracting comment. Nonetheless, she and her husband, identified with the historical Caractacus, appear in many uncritical genealogies originating in the Tudor period.

Arviragus of The Silurians[3872] married Venissa Claudia Julia of Rome. They had one son: Meric of Brittany[3869] born in 40 C.E. in Siluria, Britain; died in 90 C.E. in Britain target. The Romans, having concluded that they lacked sufficient numbers to defend the settlement, evacuated and abandoned Londinium. Boudica led 100,000 Iceni, Trinovantes, and others to fight Legio IX Hispana, and burned and destroyed Londinium and Verulamium (modern-day St Albans). An estimated 70,000–80,000 Romans and British were killed in the three cities by those led by Boudica. Suetonius, meanwhile, regrouped his forces in the West Midlands, and, despite being heavily outnumbered, defeated the Britons in the Battle of Watling Street. The crisis caused Nero to consider withdrawing all Roman forces from Britain, but Suetonius’ eventual victory over Boudica confirmed Roman control of the province. Boudica then either killed herself to avoid capture, or died of illness. The extant sources, Tacitus and Cassius Dio, differ.

Interest in these events revived in the English Renaissance and led to Boudica’s fame in the Victorian era. Boudica has remained an important cultural symbol in the United Kingdom. In 2002, she was number 35 in the BBC’s poll of the 100 Greatest Britons. The absence of native British literature during the early part of the first millennium means that knowledge of Boudica’s rebellion comes solely from the writings of the Romans.

Cunobeline (or Cunobelin, from Latin Cunobelinus) was a king in pre-Roman Britain from the late first century BC until the 40s AD. He is mentioned in passing by the classical historians Suetonius and Dio Cassius, and many coins bearing his inscription have been found. He appears to have controlled a substantial portion of south-eastern Britain, and is called "King of the Britons" (Britannorum rex) by Suetonius. Cunobeline appears in British legend as Cymbeline, as in the play by William Shakespeare. His name is a compound made up of cuno- (hound) and Belenos (the god Belenus).

From numismatic evidence Cunobelinus appears to have taken power around 9 AD, minting coins from both Camulodunum (Colchester, capital of the Trinovantes) and Verlamion (later the Roman town of Verulamium, now modern St Albans), capital of the Catuvellauni. Some of the Verulamium coins name him as the son of Tasciovanus, a previous king of the Catuvellauni; unlike his father’s, his coins name no co-rulers. However his earliest issues are from Camulodunum, indicating that he took power there first, and some have a palm or laurel wreath design, a motif borrowed from the Romans indicating a military victory. He may have been emboldened to act against the Trinovantes by the Roman defeat in the Battle of the Teutoburg Forest in Germania in AD 9. The Trinovantes were a Roman ally whose independence was protected by a treaty made by Julius Caesar in 54 BC, but problems in Germany severely discouraged Augustus's territorial ambitions and ability to defend allies in Britain.

Cunobelinus appears to have maintained quite good relations with the Roman Empire. He used the title Rex (Latin "king") and classical motifs on his coins, and his reign saw an increase in trade with the continent. Archaeology shows an increase in luxury goods imported from the continent, including Italian wine and drinking vessels, olive oil and fish sauces from Hispania, glassware, jewellery and Gaulo-Belgic tableware, which from their distribution appear to have entered Britain via the port of Camulodunum. He was probably one of the British kings that Strabo says sent embassies to Augustus. Strabo reports Rome's lucrative trade with Britain: the island’s exports included grain, gold, silver, iron, hides, slaves and hunting dogs.

Cunobelinus had three sons, Adminius, Togodumnus and Caratacus, and a brother, Epaticcus, known to history. Epaticcus expanded his influence into the territory of the Atrebates in the early 20s AD, taking the Atrebatan capital Calleva (Silchester) by about 25. He continued to expand his territory until his death in about 35, when Caratacus took over from him and the Atrebates recovered some of their territory.

Adminius, judging by his coins, had control of Kent by this time. Suetonius tells us that in ca. 40 he was banished from Britain by his father and sought refuge with the emperor Caligula; Caligula treated this as if the entire island had submitted to him. Caligula prepared an invasion of Britain, but abandoned it in farcical circumstances, ordering his soldiers to attack the waves and gather seashells as the spoils of victory.

Cunobelinus died some time before 43. The Lexden Tumulus on the outskirts of Colchester has been suggested as his tomb (although the earlier Trinovantian king Addedomarus is another candidate for its occupant). Caratacus completed the conquest of the Atrebates, and their king, Verica, fled to Rome, providing the new emperor, Claudius, with a pretext for the conquest of Britain. Caratacus and Togodumnus led the initial resistance to the invasion. Dio Cassius tells us that the "Bodunni", a tribe who were tributary to the Catuvellauni, changed sides and supported the Romans. This is probably a misspelling of the Dobunni of Gloucestershire, indicating that Cunobelinus's hegemony extended as far as the West Country.

It is possible, based on epigraphic evidence, that Sallustius Lucullus, Roman governor of Britain in the late 1st century, was his grandson.

Tiberius 16 November 42 BC – 16 March 37 AD) was a Roman Emperor from 14 AD to 37 AD. Born Tiberius Claudius Nero, a Claudian, Tiberius was the son of Tiberius Claudius Nero and Livia Drusilla. His mother divorced Nero and married Octavian, later known as Augustus, in 39 BC, making him a step-son of Octavian.

Tiberius would later marry Augustus' daughter (from his marriage to Scribonia), Julia the Elder, and even later be adopted by Augustus, by which act he officially became a Julian, bearing the name Tiberius Julius Caesar. The subsequent emperors after Tiberius would continue this blended dynasty of both families for the following thirty years; historians have named it the Julio-Claudian dynasty. In relations to the other emperors of this dynasty, Tiberius was the stepson of Augustus, grand-uncle of Caligula, paternal uncle of Claudius, and great-grand uncle of Nero.

Tiberius was one of Rome's greatest generals; his conquest of Pannonia, Dalmatia, Raetia, and temporarily, parts of Germania, laid the foundations for the northern frontier. But he came to be remembered as a dark, reclusive, and sombre ruler who never really desired to be emperor; Pliny the Elder called him tristissimus hominum, "the gloomiest of men."

After the death of Tiberius' son Drusus Julius Caesar in 23 AD, he became more reclusive and aloof. In 26 AD Tiberius removed himself from Rome and left administration largely in the hands of his unscrupulous Praetorian Prefects Lucius Aelius Sejanus and Quintus Naevius Sutorius Macro.

Caligula, Tiberius' grand-nephew and adopted grandson, succeeded Tiberius upon his death.

JULIA AGRIPPINA MINOR (Howard Charles's sixty-two-times-great-grandmother[3878], see Maternal Ancestry(270), Maternal Ancestry(274), Maternal Ancestry(275), Maternal Ancestry(279) and Maternal Ancestry(296)) was born on 7 November 15 C.E., in Oppidum Ubiorum, a Roman outpost on the Rhine River located in present-day Cologne, Germany, to Germanicus Caesar of Rome[3884] and Vipsania Agrippina The Elder[3885]. Julia Agrippina was an Empress of Rome. She died (Murdered by her son, the emperor Nero) on 23 March 59 C.E., aged 43, in Misenum, Rome, Italy. Julia Agrippina, most commonly referred to as Agrippina Minor or Agrippina the Younger, and after AD 50 known as Julia Augusta Agrippina (Minor; Latin for the "younger"; 7 November 15 – 19/23 March 59), was a Roman Empress and one of the more prominent women in the Julio-Claudian dynasty. She was a great-granddaughter of the Emperor Augustus, great-niece and adoptive granddaughter of the Emperor Tiberius, sister of the Emperor Caligula, niece and fourth wife of the Emperor Claudius, and mother of the Emperor Nero.

Agrippina the Younger has been described by ancient sources and modern scholars as ruthless, ambitious, violent, and domineering. She was a beautiful and reputable woman and according to Pliny the Elder, she had a double canine in her upper right jaw, a sign of good fortune.

Many ancient historians accuse Agrippina of poisoning Emperor Claudius, though accounts vary.

Tiberius Claudius Caesar of Rome[3878] married Julia Agrippina Minor. They had one daughter: Venissa Claudia Julia of Rome[3873] born in 12 C.E.; died in 50 C.E.

Tasciovanus was a historical king of the Catuvelauni tribe before the Roman conquest of Britain. Tasciovanus is known only through numismatic evidence. He appears to have become king of the Catuvelauni c. 20 BC, ruling from Verlamion (the site of modern-day St Albans). He is believed to have moved the tribal capital to that site from an earlier settlement, near modern-day Wheathampstead. For a brief period c. 15–10 BC he issued coins from Camulodunum (Colchester), apparently supplanting Addedomarus of the Trinovantes. After this he once again issued his coins from Verlamion, now bearing the legend RICON, for "Rigonom, Common Brittonic for "great/divine/legitimate king". Some of his coins bear other abbreviated names such as "DIAS", "SEGO" and "ANDOCO": these are generally considered to be the names of co-rulers or subordinate kings, but may instead be mint-marks. He died c. AD 9, succeeded by his son Cunobeline, who ruled primarily from Camulodunum. Another son, Epaticcus, expanded his territory westwards into the lands of the Atrebates.[1].

Nero Claudius Drusus Germanicus (January 14, 38 BC – summer of 9 BC), born Decimus Claudius Drusus the Elder was a Roman politician and military commander. He was a patrician Claudian on his legal father's side but his maternal grandmother was from a plebeian family. He was the son of Livia Drusilla and the legal stepson of her second husband, the Emperor Augustus. He was also brother of the Emperor Tiberius, father to both the Emperor Claudius and general Germanicus, paternal grandfather of the Emperor Caligula, and maternal-great-grandfather of the Emperor Nero.

He launched the first major Roman campaigns across the Rhine and began the conquest of Germany, becoming the first Roman general to reach the Weser and Elbe rivers. In 12 BC, Drusus led a successful campaign into Germany, subjugating the Sicambri. Later that year he led a naval expedition against Germanic tribes along the North Sea coast, conquering the Batavi and the Frisii, and defeating the Chauci near the mouth of the Weser. In 11 BC, he conquered the Usipetes and the Marsi, extending Roman control to the Upper Weser. In 10 BC, he launched a campaign against the Chattii and the resurgent Sicambri, subjugating both. The following year, while serving as consul, he conquered the Marcomanni and the Cheruscii, the latter near the Elbe. However, Drusus died later that year, depriving Rome of one of its best generals.

Antonia Minor, also known as Julia Antonia Minor, Antonia the Younger or simply Antonia (31 January BC - September/October AD 37) was the younger of two daughters of Mark Antony and Octavia Minor.[2] She was a niece of the Emperor Augustus, sister-in-law of the Emperor Tiberius, paternal grandmother of the Emperor Caligula and Empress Agrippina the Younger, mother of the Emperor Claudius, and both maternal great-grandmother and paternal great-aunt of the Emperor Nero. She was additionally the maternal great-aunt of the Emperor...
Valeria Messalina and Faustus Cornelius Sulla Felix, the paternal grandmother of Claudia Antonia, Claudia Octavia, and Britannicus, the grandmother of Caligula and the maternal grandmother of Julia Livia and Tiberius Gemellus.

When Tiberius died, Caligula became emperor in March 37 AD. Caligula awarded her a senatorial decree, granting her all the honors that Livia Drusilla had received in her lifetime. She was also offered the title of Augusta, previously only given to Augustus’s wife Livia, but rejected it. Six months into his reign, Caligula became seriously ill. Antonia would often offer Caligula advice, but he once told her, "I can treat anyone exactly as I please!" Caligula was rumored to have had his young cousin Gemellus beheaded, to remove him as a rival to the throne. This act was said to have outraged Antonia, who was grandmother to Gemellus as well as to Caligula.

Suetonius’s Caligula, clause 23, mentions how he might have poisoned her.

When his grandmother Antonia asked for a private interview, he refused it except in the presence of the prefect Macro, and by such indignities and annoyances he caused her death; although some think that he also gave her poison. After she was dead, he paid her no honour, but viewed her burning pyre from his dining-room.

When Claudius became emperor after his nephew’s assassination in 41 AD, he gave his mother the title of Augusta. Her birthday became a public holiday, which had yearly games and public sacrifices held. An image of her was paraded in a carriage.

Nero Claudius Drusus of Rome[3882] married Antonia Minor of Rome. They had two sons:

Tiberius Claudius Caesar of Rome[3878] born on 1 August 10 C.E. in Lyons, France; died on 13 October 54 C.E. in Capreae, near, Naples

Germanicus Caesar of Rome[3884] born on 24 May 15 C.E.; died on 10 October 19 C.E. in Antioch

GERMANICUS CAESAR OF ROME (Howard Charles's sixty-three-times-great-grandfather[3883], see Maternal Ancestry(275), Maternal Ancestry(279), Maternal Ancestry(296), Maternal Ancestry(302) and Maternal Ancestry(305)) was born on 24 May 15 BC – 10 October AD 19) was a member of the Julio-Claudian dynasty and a prominent general of the early Roman Empire. He was born in Rome, Italia, to Nero Claudius Drusus and his wife Antonia Minor. His original name at birth was either Nero Claudius Drusus after his father, or Tiberius Claudius Nero after his uncle, the second Roman emperor Tiberius. The agnomen Germanicus was added to his full name in 9 BC when it was posthumously awarded to his father in honour of his victories in Germania. By AD 4 he was adopted as Tiberius' son and heir. As a result, Germanicus was adopted out of the Claudii and into the Julii. In accordance with Roman naming conventions, he adopted the name Germanicus Julius Caesar.

In addition to Germanicus' relation to Tiberius, he was also a close relative to the other four Julio-Claudian emperors. On his mother's side Germanicus was a great-nephew of Augustus, the first emperor of Rome. By marrying his maternal second cousin, Agrippina the Elder, he became Augustus' grandson-in-law. Gaius (also known as Caligula), the emperor who succeeded Tiberius, was the son of Germanicus. After Caligula the emerorship passed to Claudius, Germanicus' younger brother. Nero, the last emperor of Augustus' dynasty, was a grandson of Germanicus on the side of his mother, Agrippina the Younger.

Germanicus' own campaigns in Germania made him famous after avenging the defeat at the Battle of the Teutoburg Forest and retrieving two of the three legionary eagles that had been lost during the battle. Beloved by the people, he was widely considered to be the perfect Roman long after his death. The Roman people for centuries would consider him as Rome's Alexander the Great due to the nature of his death at a young age, his virtuous character, his dashing physique and his military renown.

3885. VIPSANIA AGRIPPINA THE ELDER (Howard Charles's sixty-three-times-great-grandmother[3884], see Maternal Ancestry(275), Maternal Ancestry(279), Maternal Ancestry(296), Maternal Ancestry(302) and Maternal Ancestry(305)) was born in 14 B.C.E. to Marcus Vipsanius Agrippa Agrippa[3892] and Julia Caesaris Filia The Elder[3893]. Vipsania Agrippina was an Empress of Rome. She died on 18 October 33 C.E., aged about 46.
Vipsania Agrippina, most commonly known as Agrippina Major or Agrippina the Elder (Major Latin for the elder, Classical Latin 14 BC – 17/18 October AD 33), was a distinguished and prominent Roman woman of the first century CE. Agrippina was the wife of the general and statesman Germanicus and a relative to the first Roman Emperors.

She was the second granddaughter of the Emperor Augustus, sister-in-law, stepdaughter and daughter-in-law of the Emperor Tiberius, mother of the Emperor Caligula, maternal second cousin and sister-in-law of the Emperor Claudius and maternal grandmother of the Emperor Nero. From 19 to 29, Agrippina lived on the Palatine Hill in Rome. Her remaining children were raised between her, Livia Drusilla and Germanicus’ mother Antonia Minor. Agrippina had become lonely, distressed, physically ill and many of her relatives had died. Agrippina had a hasty, uncomfortable relationship with Tiberius and possibly with Tiberius’ mother Livia. She became involved in politics in Tiberius’ imperial court, became an advocate for her sons to succeed Tiberius, and opposed Tiberius’ natural son and自然 grandson Tiberius Gemellus for succession.

She was unwise in her complaints about Germanicus’ death to Tiberius. Tiberius took Agrippina by her hand and quoted the Greek line: “And if you are not queen, my dear, have I then done you wrong?”

Agrippina became involved in a group of Roman Senators who opposed the growing power and influence of the notorious Praetorian Guard Lucius Aelius Sejanus. Tiberius began to distrust Agrippina. In 26, Agrippina requested Tiberius to allow her to marry her brother-in-law, Roman Senator Gaius Asinius Gallus Saloninus. However, Tiberius didn’t allow her to marry Saloninus, because of political implications the marriage could have.

Tiberius carefully staged to invite Agrippina to dinner at the imperial palace. At dinner, Tiberius offered Agrippina an apple as a test of Agrippina’s feelings for the emperor. Agrippina had suspected that the apple could be poisoned and refused to taste the apple. This was the last time that Tiberius invited Agrippina to his dinner table. Agrippina later stated that Tiberius tried to poison her.

In 29, Agrippina and her sons Nero and Drusus, were arrested on the orders of Tiberius. Tiberius falsely accused Agrippina of planning to take sanctuary besides the image of Augustus or with the Roman Army abroad. Agrippina and her sons were put on trial by the Roman Senate. She was banished on Tiberius’ orders to the island of Pandataria (now called Ventotene) in the Tyrrhenian Sea off the coast of Campania. This was the island where her mother was banished.

In prison at Pandataria, Agrippina protested violently. On one occasion, Tiberius ordered a guard to flog her. During the flogging Agrippina would lose an eye. Refusing to eat, Agrippina was force-fed but later starved herself to death. Tacitus however leaves open the possibility that she was deprived of nourishment while in prison and her death was not voluntary. Be that as it may, she expired on 17 October 33.

Agrippina’s son Drusus died of starvation while imprisoned in Rome and Nero committed suicide soon after the trial. The notorious guard Sejanus was murdered in 31 on the orders of Tiberius. Tiberius suspected Sejanus of plotting to overthrow the emperor. After her death, Tiberius slandered her name and had the senate declare that her birth date was a date of bad omen.

In March 37, Tiberius died and Agrippina’s remaining son Caligula succeeded as emperor. After Caligula delivered Tiberius’ eulogy, Caligula sailed to Pandataria and the Pontine Islands and returned with the ashes of his mother and brother Nero. Caligula returned with their ashes in urns in his own hands. As proof of devotion to his family, Caligula arranged the most distinguished soldiers available to carry the urns of his mother and two brothers in two biers at noon in Rome, when the streets were at their busiest, to the Mausoleum of Augustus. A bronze medal on display in the British Museum shows Agrippina’s ashes being brought back to Rome by Caligula.

Vercingetorix (82-46 BCE) was a Gallic chieftain who rallied the tribes of Gaul (modern-day France) to repel the Roman invasion of Julius Caesar in 52 BCE. His name means "Victor of a Hundred Battles" and was not his birth name but a title and the only name he is known by. The Gauls kept their birth name a secret, known only to themselves and their close family, since they believed that knowledge of a person's true name gave others power over them. Vercingetorix is described as a tall and handsome charismatic leader, an inspiring public speaker, and demanding general. He is considered the first national hero of France for his defense of the land and was greatly admired in his time even by his enemies.

Little is known of Vercingetorix prior to his rebellion of 52 BCE except that he was the son of an aristocratic Gallic chief and a respected member of his tribe. Vercingetorix's father, Celtillus, was an aristocrat and leader of one of the strongest tribes in Gaul, the Averni, who commanded the allegiance of some lesser tribes. The Averni maintained a long-standing feud with another Gallic tribe, the Aedui, who had their own allies to help maintain the balance of power. Although the tribes had united to attack and loot Rome in the 4th century BCE, they did not much concern themselves with matters outside their region.

Vercingetorix continued his surprise attacks on the Roman forces but was surprised himself when his cavalry was put to rout by the German mercenaries. He was driven from the field after one such skirmish and pursued. With no time to find a safe place in the countryside to hide, Vercingetorix led his men to the city of Alesia, which he then fortified as strongly as he could in the time he had.

Caesar arrived soon after him and, after surveying the city and the surrounding lands, he set up siege works, just as he had done at Avaricum, but also built defenses around his army to prevent attack from reinforcements which might try to relieve the defenders and lift the siege. Vercingetorix and his Gallic forces, as well as the citizens of the city, who had been taken surprise by his arrival, were trapped inside the city walls, and the food steadily began to run out. Vercingetorix first released all his horses and as many of his men as he could spare to go bring help; some of them were able to break through the Roman lines and escape. He then sent the citizens of Alesia out through the gates, hoping the Romans would let non-combatants pass as these were mostly the elderly, women, and children; the Romans lines held fast, however, and these people died slowly of starvation and the elements in the noman's land between the two adversaries.

Vercingetorix's cousin, Vercassivellaunus, had been sent out with his cavalry to bring reinforcements when Vercingetorix had first arrived at Alesia. He returned now with a sizeable force and struck Caesar's lines to the northwest at a small gap in the siege works. Seeing help arrive, Vercingetorix ordered his men out of the city to strike at the same place, and the two Gallic forces caught the Romans between them. The Roman line began to crumble, and victory seemed near for the Gauls. Caesar, watching from a tower, put on his well-known red cloak, instantly recognizable to his men and to the enemy, and entered the battle himself, encouraging his men as he struck down the enemy with his own sword. The Romans rallied and drove the Gauls back, winning the battle.

All hope was now lost behind the walls in Alesia. The hoped-for help had been defeated and driven off, and siege would continue. Vercingetorix understood there was no escape for himself and his men. At this point two different versions of events emerge: according to Caesar, the Gallic chiefs in Vercingetorix's army decided to hand him over to end the siege while, according to the historian Cassius Dio, Vercingetorix surrendered himself, taking Caesar and his staff by surprise in their camp. According to Cassius Dio, Vercingetorix "came unannounced, appearing suddenly at a tribunal where Caesar was seated in judgement" (40.41). Dressed in his finest armor, Vercingetorix was an imposing figure, even in defeat, and Dio claims that many in Caesar's camp were startled; though not, it seems, Caesar himself. Without saying a word, Vercingetorix slowly removed his armor and then fell to his knees at Caesar's feet. Dio writes, "many of those watching were filled with pity as they compared his present condition with his previous good fortune". Caesar was not filled with pity, however, and had him taken away in chains and sent to prison in Rome. The defenders of Alesia were massacred, sold as slaves, or given as slaves to the soldiers for their service during the siege.
When Caesar had completed the last details of his conquest of Gaul, Vercingetorix was dragged from his prison to appear in Caesar's triumphal parade through the Roman streets; then he was executed. Although defeated, Vercingetorix's fame grew, and he became a popular cult figure and legend shortly after his death. The scholar Philip Matyszak notes that "the Gauls never forgot the time when they had united as a nation" and how "today he is widely recognized as the first national hero of France". The courage and resolve of Vercingetorix as he risked his life and the lives of his people to resist foreign conquest and enslavement still inspires people in the modern day, and his name continues to be honored among the great heroes of the ancient world.

Marcus Antonius January 14, 83 BC – August 1, 30 BC), commonly known in English as Mark or Marc Antony, was a Roman politician and general who played a critical role in the transformation of the Roman Republic from an oligarchy into the autocratic Roman Empire. Antony was a supporter of Julius Caesar, and served as one of his generals during the conquest of Gaul and the Civil War. Antony was appointed administrator of Italy while Caesar eliminated political opponents in Greece, North Africa, and Spain. After Caesar's death in 44 BC, Antony joined forces with Marcus Aemilius Lepidus, another of Caesar's generals, and Octavian, Caesar's nephew and adopted son, forming a three-man dictatorship known to historians as the Second Triumvirate. The Triumvirs defeated Caesar's murderers, the Liberatores, at the Battle of Philippi in 42 BC, and divided the government of the Republic between themselves. Antony was assigned Rome’s eastern provinces, including the client kingdom of Egypt, then ruled by Cleopatra VII Philopator, and was given the command in Rome’s war against Parthia. Relations among the Triumvirs were strained as the various members sought greater political power. Civil war between Antony and Octavian was averted in 40 BC, when Antony married Octavian’s sister, Octavia. Despite this marriage, Antony carried on a love affair with Cleopatra, who bore him three children, further straining Antony’s relations with Octavian. Lepidus was expelled from the association in 36 BC, and in 33 BC disagreements between Antony and Octavian caused a split between the remaining Triumvirs. Their ongoing hostility erupted into civil war in 31 BC, as the Roman Senate, at Octavian’s direction, declared war on Cleopatra and proclaimed Antony a traitor. Later that year, Antony was defeated by Octavian’s forces at the Battle of Actium. Defeated, Antony and Cleopatra fled to Egypt, where they committed suicide. With Antony dead, Octavian was the undisputed master of the Roman world. In 27 BC, Octavian was granted the title of Augustus, marking the final stage in the transformation of the Roman Republic into an empire, with himself as the first Roman emperor.

He was a close friend, son-in-law, and lieutenant to Octavian and was responsible for the construction of some of the most notable buildings in the history of Rome and for important military victories, most notably at the Battle of Actium in 31 BC against the forces of Mark Antony and Cleopatra. As a result of these victories Octavian became the first Roman Emperor, adopting the name of Augustus. Agrippa assisted Augustus in making Rome a city of marble and renovating aqueducts to give all Romans, from every social class, access to the highest quality public services. Emperor Tiberius, maternal grandmother of the Emperor Caligula and the Empress Agrippina the Younger, grandmother-in-law of the Emperor Claudius, and maternal great-grandmother of the Emperor Nero. Because Augustus was her legitimate father, having married her mother with conubium, Augustus had Patria Potestas over her. Patria Potestas lasted until the paterfamilias, Augustus, either died or emancipated his child. Marriage had no effect on Patria Potestas, unless it was manus marriage which was rare at this point in time.

As the daughter of Augustus, mother (now legally the sister) of two of his heirs, Lucius and Gaius, and wife of another, Tiberius, Julia's future seemed assured to all. Yet in 2 BC she was arrested for adultery and treason; Augustus sent her a letter in Tiberius' name declaring the marriage null and void (Tiberius was at this time on the island of Rhodes and unable to respond quickly). He also asserted in public that she had been plotting against his own life. Though at the time Augustus had been passing legislation to promote family values, he likely knew of her intrigues with other men but hesitated for some time to accuse her. Several of Julia's supposed lovers were exiled, most notably Sempronius Gracchus, while Iullus Antonius (son of Mark Antony and Fulvia) was forced to commit suicide. Others have suggested that Julia's alleged paramours were members of her city clique, who wished to remove Tiberius from favour and replace him with Antonius. This would explain the letter, written by Gracchus, asking Augustus to allow Julia to divorce Tiberius.

Reluctant to execute her, Augustus decided on Julia's exile, in harsh conditions. She was confined on the island of Pandateria, with no men in sight, forbidden even to drink wine. The island itself measures less than 1.75 square kilometres (0.68 sq mi). She was allowed no visitor unless her father had given permission and had been informed of the stature, complexion, and even of any marks or scars upon his body. Scribonia, Julia's biological mother, accompanied her into exile. It is said that Augustus would remark of them: "If only I had never married, or had died childless", slightly misquoting Hector, in the Iliad. Julia's exile cast a long shadow over Augustus's remaining years.

Five years later, Julia was allowed to return to the mainland, though Augustus never forgave her and ordered her to remain in Rhegium. He explicitly gave instructions that she should not be buried in his Mausoleum of Augustus.

Julia died from malnutrition some time after Augustus' death in 14, but before 15. With her father dead and no sons to take the throne, Julia was left completely at the mercy of the new emperor, Tiberius, who was free to exact his vengeance. The circumstances of her death are obscure. One theory is that Tiberius, who loathed her for dishonouring their marriage, had her starved to death. Another theory is that upon learning her last surviving son Agrippa Postumus had been murdered, she succumbed to despair. Simultaneously, her alleged paramour Sempronius Gracchus, who had endured 14 years of exile on Cercina (Kerkenna) off the African coast, was executed at Tiberius' instigation, or on the independent initiative of Nonius Asprenas, proconsul of Africa. Julia's daughter Julia the Younger was also exiled in 8 AD on a charge of adultery on the same island as her mother - but actually for involvement in the attempted revolt by her husband Lucius Aemilius Paullus - and died in 29 AD after 20 years of exile; she was also forbidden to be buried in Augustus' tomb by his will.

Marcus Antonius Creticus (flourished 1st century BC) was a Roman politician, member of the Antonius family. Creticus was son of Marcus Antonius and, by his marriage to Julia Antonia, he had three sons: Triumvir Marcus Antonius, Gaius Antonius and Lucius Antonius. He was elected praetor in 74 BC and received an extraordinary commission, similar to that bestowed upon triumvir Pompey by the Gabinian law 7 years later in 67 BC, and that conveyed on his father three decades before in 102 BC, to clear the Mediterranean Sea of the threat of piracy, and thereby assist the operations against King Mithridates VI of Pontus. Creticus not only failed in the task, but plundered the provinces he was supposed to protect from robbery. He attacked the Cretans, who had made an alliance with the pirates, but was totally defeated, most of his ships being sunk. Diodorus Siculus states that he only saved himself by a disgraceful treaty. As a result of this defeat he was mockingly given the byname Creticus, which means "conqueror of Crete", and also "man made of chalk", when translated from Latin. He died soon afterwards (72 BC -71 BC) in Crete. Most authorities are agreed as to his avarice and incompetence, but the biographer Plutarch describes him as a friendly, honest and generous man.

Julia was a Mother of Mark Anthony. She died in 39 B.C.E., aged about 65. Citation: Source 96. Unreliable or estimated.

Julia (104 BC-after 39 BC) or Julia Antonia (known from the sources to distinguish her from other Juliae) was a daughter of Lucius Julius Caesar, the consul of 90 BC, and mother of the future triumvir and deputy of Caesar, Mark Antony. She was a sister of the Lucius Julius Caesar who was consul in 64 BC. Her mother is unknown. She was born and raised in Rome. Julia was a cousin of Julius Caesar. Julia married Marcus Antonius Creticus, a man of a senatorial family. Their sons were the triumvir Mark Antony, Gaius Antonius and Lucius Antonius. Because of their kinship through her, Gaius Julius Caesar was obliged to promote the political careers of her sons, despite his distaste for their father and his generally low opinion of their abilities. After Julia’s first husband died in 74 BC, she married Publius Cornelius Lentulus (Sura), a politician who in 63 BC was involved in the Catilinarian conspiracy and was executed on the orders of Cicero.

Julia had raised her sons through her marriages. Plutarch describes her as one of “most nobly born and admirable women of her time”, though most other sources are considerably less flattering (and likely more accurate). The following clause from Plutarch describes her relationship with her first husband:

His father was Antony, surnamed of Crete, not very famous or distinguished in public life, but a worthy good man, and particularly remarkable for his liberality, as may appear from a single example. He was not very rich, and was for that reason checked in the exercise of his good nature by his wife. A friend that stood in need of money came to borrow of him. Money he had none, but he bade a servant bring him water in a silver basin, with which, when it was brought, he wetted his face, as if he meant to shave, and, sending away the servant upon another errand, gave his friend the basin, desiring him to turn it to his purpose. And when there was afterwards a great inquiry for it in the house, and his wife was in a very ill humour, and was going to put the servants one by one to the search, he acknowledged what he had done, and begged her pardon.

— Plutarch, Antony 1

Elsewhere Plutarch illustrates her character with an episode from the proscription of 43 BC, during the Second Triumvirate:

His uncle, Lucius Caesar, being closely pursued, took refuge with his sister, who, when the murderers had broken into her house and were pressing into her chamber, met them at the door, and spreading out hands, cried out several times. "You shall not kill Lucius Caesar till you first dispatch me who gave your general his birth!" and in this manner she succeeded in getting her brother out of the way, and saving his life.

— Plutarch, Antony 20

During the Perusine War (modern Perugia) between 41 BC-40 BC, Julia left Rome, although Octavian (future Roman Emperor Augustus) treated her with kindness. She never trusted Sextus Pompeius. When Sextus Pompeius was in Sicily, Julia had sent to Greece for Antony, a distinguished escort and convey of triremes. After the reconciliation of the triumvirs, Julia returned with Antony to Italy in 39 BC and was probably present at the meeting with Sextus Pompeius at Misenum.

Gaius Octavius (about 100 – 59 BC) was an ancestor to the Roman Emperors of the Julio-Claudian dynasty. He is the father of the Emperor Augustus, step-grandfather of the Emperor Tiberius, great-grandfather of the Emperor Claudius, great-great-grandfather of the Emperor Nero. Hailing from Velitrae, he descended from an old, wealthy equestrian branch of the gens Octavia. Despite being from a wealthy family, his family was plebeian, rather than patrician. As a novus homo ("new man"), he would not be of a senatorial family.

His grandfather, Gaius Octavius, fought as a military tribune in Sicily during the Second Punic War. His father Gaius Octavius was a municipal magistrate who lived to an advanced age. He is a distant relative (possibly as third cousins, through their ancestor Gnaeus Octavius Rufus) to Gnaeus Octavius, the consul of 87 BC who led the opposition to Lucius Cornelius Cinna.

Atia is the daughter of Julius Caesar's sister Julia Minor, mother of the Emperor Augustus, step-grandmother of the Emperor Tiberius, great-grandmother of the Emperor Claudius, great-great-grandmother of the Emperor Nero.

The name Atia Balba was also borne by the other two daughters[citation needed] of Julia and her husband praetor Marcus Atius Balbus. They were Atia's older sister Atia Balba Prima[citation needed], and her younger sister was Atia Balba Tertia. As a result, she was sometimes referred to as Atia Balba Secunda to differentiate her from her two sisters. In former portrayals of the ancient history the mother of Augustus, Atia, was still described as the elder of two sisters.

Augustus (23 September 63 BC – 19 August 14 AD) was the founder of the Roman Principate and considered the first Emperor, controlling the Roman Empire from 27 BC until his death in AD 14. He was born Gaius Octavius into an old and wealthy equestrian branch of the plebeian Octavii family. His maternal great-uncle Julius Caesar was assassinated in 44 BC, and Octavius was named in Caesar's will as his adopted son and heir, then known as Octavianus (Anglicized as Octavian). He, Mark Antony, and Marcus Lepidus formed the Second Triumvirate to defeat the assassins of Caesar. Following their victory at Philippi, the Triumvirate divided the Roman Republic among themselves and ruled as military dictators. The Triumvirate was eventually torn apart by the competing ambitions of its members. Lepidus was driven into exile and stripped of his position, and Antony committed suicide following his defeat at the Battle of Actium by Octavian in 31 BC. After the demise of the Second Triumvirate, Augustus restored the outward façade of the free Republic, with governmental power vested in the Roman Senate, the executive magistrates, and the legislative assemblies. In reality, however, he retained his autocratic power over the Republic as a military dictator. By law, Augustus held a collection of powers granted to him for life by the Senate, including supreme military command, and those of tribune and censor. It took several years for Augustus to develop the framework within which a formally republican state could be led under his sole rule. He rejected monarchical titles, and instead called himself Princeps Civitatis (“First Citizen of the State”). The resulting constitutional framework became known as the Principate, the first phase of the Roman Empire.

The reign of Augustus initiated an era of relative peace known as the Pax Romana (The Roman Peace). The Roman world was largely free from large-scale conflict for more than two centuries, despite continuous wars of imperial expansion on the Empire's frontiers and one year-long civil war over the imperial succession. Augustus dramatically enlarged the Empire, annexing Egypt, Dalmatia, Pannonia, Noricum, and Raetia; expanding possessions in Africa; expanding into Germania; and completing the conquest of Hispania.

Beyond the frontiers, he secured the Empire with a buffer region of client states and made peace with the Parthian Empire through diplomacy. He reformed the Roman system of taxation, developed networks of roads with an official courier system, established a standing army, established the Praetorian Guard, created official police and fire-fighting services for Rome, and rebuilt much of the city during his reign. Augustus died in AD 14 at the age of 75. He probably died from natural causes, although there were unconfirmed rumors that his wife Livia poisoned him. He was succeeded as Emperor by his adopted son (also stepson and former son-in-law) Tiberius.

Gaius Octavius Augustus Caesar married Livia Drusilla of Rome[3889].

SCRIBONIA OF ROME (Howard Charles's sixty-five-times-great-grandmother[3898], see Maternal Ancestry(296), Maternal Ancestry(302), Maternal Ancestry(305), Maternal Ancestry(308) and Maternal Ancestry(311)) was born in 68 B.C.E. Scribonia was the daughter of a Lucius Scribonius Libo, probably the praetor of that name of 80 BC. Her brother of the same name was consul in 34 BC. The name of her mother was Sentia. According to Suetonius, Scribonia's first two marriages were to former consuls. Her first husband is unknown, although it had been suggested that he was Gnaeus Cornelius Lentulus Marcellinus (consul 56 BC), as there is an inscription that refers to freedmen (post 39 BC) of Scribonia and her son Cornelius Marcellinus, indicating that she had a son from her previous marriage and that he was living with her after she divorced her third husband. He may have died young and is ignored by historians. Her second husband was a Publius Cornelius Scipio, a supporter of Pompey. They had a daughter Cornelia Scipio who married the censor Lucius Aemilius Paullus. Scribonia may have also been the mother to Publius Cornelius Scipio, consul in 16 BC. In 40 BC Scribonia was forced to divorce her husband and marry Octavian, who was younger than she was by several years. Octavian in turn divorced his wife Clodia Pulchra, marrying Scribonia to cement a political alliance with her niece's (also named Scribonia) husband Sextus Pompey. Their daughter Julia the Elder was born in 39 BC, probably in October, and on that very same day Octavian divorced her. Their marriage had not been a happy one; Octavian felt she nagged him too much. She never remarried Cassius Dio and Marcus Velleius Paterculus says that when her youngest child, Julia, was sent into exile for adultery and treason, she requested that she be allowed to accompany her. When Emperor Tiberius came into power, he separated Scribonia from her daughter, and allegedly starved Julia to death. When Scribonia died is unknown. It is mainly placed two years after Julia and Augustus. In Seneca, she is mentioned as being alive and in full possession of her wits as late as the end of 16 when she tried to convince her nephew Marcus Scribonius Libo not to commit suicide and face his punishment. Scribonia's image as a shrew is probably the product of propaganda to divert the potentially scandalous circumstances of her divorce from Augustus. Seneca describes her as a gravis femina; gravis meaning “dignified” and “severe”. Modern scholars are divided on her character: while some describe her as “tiresome” and ”morose” most others view her as an ideal example of a Roman matron as she clearly had the "composure" and "calmness" to look after depressed and suicidal characters such as her daughter and nephew. [9][10] Sextus Propertius praises her motherhood referring to her as "sweet mother Scribonia" in Cornelia Scipio's funeral elegy in 16 BC.
Gaius Octavius Augustus Caesar[3898] married Scribonia of Rome. They had one daughter:
Julia Caesaris Filia The Elder[3893] born on 30 October 39 C.E.; died in 14 C.E.

Julia was probably born around 76 BC. After her mother died in 69 BC, she was raised by her paternal grandmother Aurelia Cotta. Her father engaged her to Quintus Servilius Caepio, who could have been Marcus Junius Brutus (Caesar's most famous assassin) who, after being adopted by his uncle Quintus Servilius Caepio, was known as Quintus Servilius Caepio Brutus for an unknown period of time. Caesar broke off this engagement and married her to Pompey in April 59 BC, with whom Caesar sought a strong political alliance in forming the First Triumvirate. This family-alliance of its two great chiefs was regarded as the firmest bond between Caesar and Pompey, and was accordingly viewed with much alarm by the optimates (the oligarchal party in Rome), especially by Marcus Tullius Cicero and Cato the Younger. Pompey was supposedly infatuated with his bride. The personal charms of Julia were remarkable: she was a kind woman of beauty and virtue; and although policy prompted her union, and she was thirty years younger than her husband, she possessed in Pompey a devoted husband, to whom she was, in return, devotedly attached. A rumor suggested that the aging conqueror was losing interest in politics in favor of domestic life with his young wife. In fact, Pompey had been given the governorship of Hispania Ulterior, but had been permitted to remain in Rome to oversee the Roman grain supply as curator annonae, exercising his command through subordinates.

Julia died before a breach between her husband and father had become inevitable. At the election of aediles in 55 BC, Pompey was surrounded by a tumultuous mob, and his gown was sprinkled with blood of the rioters. A slave carried the stained toga to his house on the Carinae and was seen by Julia. Imagining that her husband was slain, she fell into premature labor, and her constitution received an irreparable shock. In August of the next year, 54 BC, she died in child birth, and her infant—a son, according to some writers, a daughter, according to others,—did not survive and died along with Julia. Caesar was in Britain, according to Seneca, when he received the tidings of Julia's death.

Pompey wished her ashes to repose in his favourite Alban villa, but the Roman people, who loved Julia, determined they should rest in the field of Mars (Campus Martius). For permission a special decree of the senate was necessary, and Lucius Domitius Ahenobarbus, one of the consuls of 54 BC, impelled by his hatred for Pompey and Caesar, procured an interdict from the tribunes. But the popular will prevailed, and, after listening to a funeral oration in the forum, the people placed her urn in the field of Mars. Lucius Julius Caesar (ca. 135 BC–87 BC) was a consul of the Roman Republic in 90 BC. He was involved in the downfall of the plebeian tribune Lucius Appuleius Saturninus in 100 BC. He was elected praetor for 94 BC without having been quaestor and aedile. Later he became governor of Macedonia. During his consulship, he defeated the Samnites. Lucius proposed legislation (one of the Leges Juliae or "Julian laws") granting Roman citizenship to allies who didn’t participate in the Social War against Rome in 90 BC. In 89 he became censor and due to the success of the Julian Law, became responsible for allocating new citizens into voting districts. His colleague in this task was a former consul, Publius Licinius Crassus Dives (consul 97 BC) (father of triumvir, Marcus Licinius Crassus). Lucius and his brother, Gaius Julius Caesar Strabo Vopiscus, were killed together in 87 BC at the beginning of the Civil War by partisans of Gaius Marius. They died fighting in the streets. According to Livy, their heads were exposed on the speaker’s platform.

His children, by his wife Fulvia, were Lucius Julius Caesar, who was consul in 64 BC, and Julia Antonia.

Julia Antonia[3895] born in 104 B.C.E.; died in 39 B.C.E.

Marcus Atius Balbus was a Praetor of Rome. He died in 51 B.C.E., aged about 54.

Balbus was born and raised in Aricia into a political family and was the son and heir of the elder Marcus Atius Balbus (148 – 87 BC). His mother was Pompeia the sister to consul Gnaeus Pompeius Strabo, father of Pompey Magnus, a member of the First Triumvirate with Julius Caesar and Marcus Licinius Crassus. The family of the elder Balbus came from a Roman senatorial family of plebs status from Aricia (modern Ariccia, Italy). "Balbus" in Latin means stammer.

During the consulship of Julius Caesar in 59 BC, Balbus was appointed along with Pompey to a board of commissioners under a Julian Law to divide estates in Campania among the commoners. Cicero stated that Pompey would say as a joke about Balbus, that he was not a person of any importance.

He married Julia Minor, the younger of the two sisters of the dictator Gaius Julius Caesar. Julia bore him three (or two) daughters and they were:

Atia Balba Prima
Atia Balba Secunda (or: Atia Major) married first, Gaius Octavius and later, Lucius Marcus Philippus; and became the mother of Octavia Minor, who was the fourth wife of triumvir Mark Antony, and of the first Emperor Augustus.
Atia Balba Tertia (or: Atia Minor) married the younger Lucius Marcus Philippus, the stepson of her sister through her second marriage, and became the mother of Marcia, who later married Paullus Fabius Maximus.

The younger Balbus died in 51 BC.

3903. Julia and her siblings were born and raised at Rome. Because Roman daughters typically received praenomina only if they had several elder sisters, the elder sister came to be known as "Julia Major", and the younger as "Julia Minor", when it was necessary to distinguish between them. It is not known if it was the elder or the younger of the dictator's sisters who gave evidence against Publius Claudius Pulcher when he was impeached for impiety in 61 BC. Julia and her mother gave the legal courts a detailed account of the affair he had with Pompeia, Julius Caesar’s wife. Caesar divorced Pompeia over the scandal.

Caesar's youngest sister married Marcus Atius Balbus, a praetor and commissioner who came from a senatorial family of plebeian status. Julia bore him three (or two, according to other sources) daughters. The second daughter, known as Atia Balba Caesonia was the mother of Octavia Minor (fourth wife of triumvir Mark Antony) and of first Emperor Augustus. Atia Balba Caesonia’ sister, Atia Balba Prima (or Atia Balba Tertia) was the wife of Lucius Marcius Philippus. Their daughter, Marcia, later married to Paulus Fabius Maximus and bore him a son, Paulus Fabius Persicus. Fabia Numanitana was either Marcia's daughter with Maximus or a daughter of his brother Africans Fabius Maximus.

Another Atia, who may have been her daughter or her husband's daughter with a woman named Claudia, was married to Gaius Junitus Silanus. Their son, also named Gaius Junitus Silanus, became consul in AD 10. Though, Atia may have been the emendation of "Appia". Sons of the consul in 10 were Appius Junitus Silanus, consul in 28, Decimus Junitus Silanus, who involved in the disgrace of Julia the Younger, and Marcus Junitus Silanus, consul suffectus in 15.

Balbus died in 52 BC and Julia died a year later. At age 12 Octavius, her youngest grandson, the future Emperor Augustus, delivered her funeral oration.

Marcus Atius Balbus of Rome[3902] married Julia (Sister Of Julius Caesar) Minor. They had one daughter:

Atia Balba Caesonia of Rome[3897] born in 85 B.C.E.; died in 43 B.C.E.

Julius (Gaius) was an Emperor of Rome. He died (Murdered by the senate conspirators) in 44 B.C.E., aged about 56, in The Forum, Rome.

Julius (Gaius) had four partnerships. He was married to Calpurnia Pisonis[3905], Cornelia Cinna[3906] and Pompeia Sulla[3907]. He was also the partner of Cleopatra VII Ptolemy[3908].

Gaius Julius Caesar 13 July 100 BC – 15 March 44 BC), usually called Julius Caesar, was a Roman politician and general who played a critical role in the events that led to the demise of the Roman Republic and the rise of the Roman Empire. He is also known as a notable author of Latin prose.

In 60 BC, Caesar, Crassus and Pompey formed a political alliance that dominated Roman politics for several years. Their attempts to amass power as Populares were opposed by the Optimates within the Roman Senate, among them Cato the Younger with the frequent support of Cicero. Caesar's victories in the Gallic Wars, completed by 51 BC, extended Rome's territory to the English Channel and the Rhine. Caesar became the first Roman general to cross both the Channel and the Rhine, when he built a bridge across the Rhine and crossed the Channel to invade Britain. These achievements granted him unmatched military power and threatened to eclipse the standing of Pompey, who had realigned himself with the Senate after the death of Crassus in 53 BC. With the Gallic Wars concluded, the Senate ordered Caesar to step down from his military command and return to Rome. Caesar found himself with no other options, but to cross the Rubicon with the 13th Legion, leaving his province and illegally entering Roman Italy under arms. Civil war resulted and Caesar's victory in the war put him in an unrivalled position of power and influence.

After assuming control of government, Caesar began a programme of social and governmental reforms, including the creation of the Julian calendar. He gave citizenship to many residents of far regions of the Roman Empire. He initiated land reform and support for veterans. He centralised the bureaucracy of the Republic and was eventually proclaimed "dictator in perpetuity", giving him additional authority. His populist and authoritarian reforms angered the elites, who began to conspire against him. On the Ides of March (15 March) 44 BC Caesar was assassinated by a group of rebellious senators led by Gaius Cassius Longinus, Marcus Junitus Brutus and Decimus Junitus Brutus.[4][5] A new series of civil wars broke out and the constitutional government of the Republic was never fully restored. Caesar's adopted heir Octavian, later known as Augustus, rose to sole power after defeating his opponents in the civil war. Octavian set about solidifying his power and the era of the Roman Empire began.

Much of Caesar's life is known from his own accounts of his military campaigns and from other contemporary sources, mainly the letters and speeches of Cicero and the historical writings of Sallust. The later biographies of Caesar by Suetonius and Plutarch are also major sources. Caesar is considered by many historians to be one of the greatest military commanders in history.

Calpurnia was the third and last wife of Julius Caesar. Born in 75 BC, she was the daughter of Lucius Calpurnius Piso Caesoninus, consul in 58 BC, and sister of Lucius Calpurnius Piso (Pontifex), consul in 15 BC. Calpurnia married Caesar in late 59 BC. Contemporary sources describe her as a humble, often shy woman. No children resulted from their union. Caesar's daughter, Julia, was likely older than her stepmother, and had married Gnaeus Pompeius Magnus around the same time. Following Caesar's assassination in 44 BC, Calpurnia delivered all Caesar's personal papers, including his will and notes, and his most precious possessions to the consul Marcus Antonius, one of Caesar's most trusted allies. She never remarried.

According to a tradition reported in some ancient sources, Calpurnia had a premonition about her husband's murder and endeavoured in vain to warn him. Unaware that praetor Decimus Junius Brutus Albinus was one of the conspirators against her husband, she asked him to send word to the Senate that Caesar was ill and unable to attend. However, Caesar rejected this plan, and Brutus escorted him into the hands of his enemies.

Julius (Gaius) Caesar[3904] married Calpurnia Pisonis.

3906. CORNELIA CINNA (Howard Charles's sixty-six-times-great-great-aunt by marriage[3911]) was born in 97 B.C.E. She died in 69 B.C.E., aged about 28.

Cornelia was the daughter of Lucius Cornelius Cinna, one of the most influential politicians at Rome during the conflict between the generals Gaius Marius and Lucius Cornelius Sulla. He held the consulship for an unprecedented term of four consecutive years, from BC 87 to 84, when he was slain in a soldiers' mutiny. During this period, he espoused the side of Marius, leaving his family exposed to Sulla's wrath on the latter's return in 82.

By his wife, Annia, Cinna had a son, Lucius, and two daughters, conventionally known as Cornelia Major, who married Gnaeus Domitius Ahenobarbus, and Cornelia Minor, the wife of Caesar. The designations Major and Minor were not really part of their names, but were used to distinguish between sisters, who bore the same nomen. Since there were a great many Corneliae at Rome, Caesar's wife is occasionally referred to as Cornelia Cinnae, or "Cinna's Cornelia".

Suetonius reports that Caesar and Cornelia were married in the consulate occurring after Caesar lost his father, which occurred in his sixteenth year. In Suetonius' chronology, Caesar was born in 100 BC, placing the death of his father in 85 or 84. Thus, he probably married Cornelia in 83, when he was about seventeen years old, and she perhaps a little younger. Their daughter, Julia, was Caesar's only legitimate child, and the only one he acknowledged.

The young Caesar was one of those to whom Sulla turned his attention after returning to Rome. Although he had taken no part in the government of Marius and Cinna, and done nothing to oppose Sulla's return, Caesar's aunt, Julia, was the wife of Marius; his cousin was the younger Marius, who as consul in 82 was defeated by Sulla, and had taken his own life as the city fell. Marius and Cinna had appointed the young Caesar to an important priesthood, and by marrying Cinna's daughter, Caesar gained control of a substantial dowry. Sulla regarded Caesar as a potential rival, and commanded him to divorce Cornelia.

However, neither the deprivation of his priesthood, Cornelia's dowry, and his own inheritance, nor the threat of violence, would induce Caesar to forsake his wife. He was proscribed, and escaped Rome in disguise, evading capture by regularly changing his place of concealment, and on at least one occasion by bribing the commander of a patrol sent to search for Sulla's enemies. Eventually Sulla relented, following the intercession of Caesar's numerous friends and kinsmen, and Caesar returned home to Cornelia. After about thirteen years of marriage, Cornelia died early in her husband's quaestorship, which occurred in BC 69 or 68. Caesar was due to depart for Spain, and had already pronounced the funeral oration of his aunt, Julia, from the rostra, as was customary for elderly Roman matrons. He then gave an oration in honour of Cornelia, which was extraordinary in the case of a young woman, although it later became commonplace.

After his quaestorship, Caesar returned to Rome, and married Pompeia, a granddaughter of Sulla. His own daughter, Julia, subsequently married Gnaeus Pompeius Magnus, a lieutenant of Sulla's who had since become Rome's most illustrious general, and held the consulship of Pompeia (fl. 1st century BC) was the second wife of Julius Caesar. Her parents were Quintus Pompeius Rufus, a son of a former consul, and Cornelia, the daughter of the Roman dictator Sulla.

Caesar married Pompeia in 67 BC, after he had served as quaestor in Hispania, his first wife Cornelia having died the previous year in giving birth to her son who was stillborn. Caesar was the nephew of Gaius Marius, and Cornelia had been the daughter of Lucius Cornelius Cinna so that they were related to both the leaders of the losing populares side in the civil war of the 80s BC.

In 63 BC Caesar was elected to the position of the Pontifex Maximus, the chief priest of the Roman state religion, which came with an official residence on the Via Sacra. In 62 BC Pompeia hosted the festival of the Bona Dea ("good goddess"), which no man was permitted to attend, in this house. However a young patrician named Publius Clodius Pulcher managed to gain admittance disguised as a woman, apparently for the purpose of seducing Pompeia. He was caught and prosecuted for sacrilege. Caesar gave no evidence against Clodius at his trial, and he was acquitted. Nevertheless, Caesar divorced Pompeia, saying that "my wife ought not even to be under suspicion." This gave rise to a proverb, sometimes expressed: "Caesar's wife must be above suspicion."

Julius (Gaius) Caesar[3904], aged about 33, married Pompeia Sulla, aged about 23, in 67 B.C.E.

Cleopatra VII Philopator [89[ – August 12, 30 BC], known to history as Cleopatra, was the last active ruler of the Ptolemaic Kingdom of Egypt, briefly survived as pharaoh by her son Caesarion. After her reign, Egypt became a province of the recently established Roman Empire. Cleopatra was a member of the Ptolemaic dynasty, a Greek family of Macedonian origin[8] that ruled Egypt after Alexander the Great's death during the Hellenistic period. The Ptolemies spoke Greek[9] throughout their dynasty, and refused to speak Late Egyptian, which is the reason that Greek as well as Egyptian were used on official court documents such as the Rosetta Stone. By contrast, Cleopatra did learn to speak Egyptian and represented herself as the reincarnation of the Egyptian goddess Isis.

Cleopatra originally ruled jointly with her father Ptolemy XII Auletes, and later with her brothers Ptolemy XIII Theos Philopator and Ptolemy XIV, whom she married as per Egyptian custom, but eventually she became sole ruler. As queen, she consummated a liaison with Julius Caesar that solidified her grip on the throne. She later elevated Caesarion, her son with Caesar, to co-ruler in name. After the assassination of Julius Caesar in 44 BC, she aligned with Mark Antony in opposition to Caesar's legal heir, Octavian (later known as Augustus). With Antony, she bore the twins Cleopatra Selene II and Alexander Helios, and son Ptolemy Philadelphus (her unions with her brothers had produced no children). Antony committed suicide after losing the Battle of Actium to Octavian's forces, and Cleopatra followed suit. According to a popular belief, she killed herself by means of an asp bite on August 12, 30 BC. She was outlived by Caesarion, who was declared pharaoh by his supporters, but he was soon killed on Octavian's orders. Egypt then became the Roman province of Aegyptus. Cleopatra's legacy survives in numerous works of art, both ancient and modern, and many dramatizations of incidents from her life in literature and other media. These include William Shakespeare's tragedy Antony and Cleopatra; George Frideric Handel's opera Giulio Cesare; George Bernard Shaw's play Caesar and Cleopatra; Jules Massenet's opera Cléopâtre; and the films Cleopatra (1934) and Cleopatra (1963). The surviving body of ancient works depicting Cleopatra include statues, sculpted busts, profile portraits on coins, and a Roman Gnaeus Pompeius Magnus 29 September 106 BC – 28 September 48 BC), usually known in English as Pompey the Great, was a military and political leader of the late Roman Republic. He came from a wealthy Italian provincial background, and his father had been the first to establish the family among the Roman nobility. Pompey's immense success as a general while still very young enabled him to advance directly to his first consulship without meeting the normal requirements for office. His success as a military commander in Sulla's second civil war resulted in Sulla bestowing the nickname Magnus, "the Great", upon him. He was consul three times and celebrated three triumphs.

In mid-60 BC, Pompey joined Marcus Licinius Crassus and Gaius Julius Caesar in the unofficial military-political alliance known as the First Triumvirate, which Pompey's marriage to Caesar's daughter Julia helped secure. After the deaths of Julia and Crassus, Pompey sided with the optimates, the conservative faction of the Roman Senate. Pompey and Caesar then contended for the leadership of the Roman state, leading to a civil war. When Pompey was defeated at the Battle of Pharsalus in 48 BC, he sought refuge in Egypt, where he was assassinated. His career and defeat are significant in Rome's subsequent transformation from Republic to Empire.

Pompeia (flourished 2nd and 1st century BC) was a Roman woman. Pompeia was born and raised into a noble family in Picenum (modern Marche & Abruzzo) a rural district in Northern Italy, off the Adriatic Coast. Pompeia’s mother was a woman called Lucilia. Lucilia’s family originated from Suessa Aurunca (modern Sessa Aurunca) and she was a sister of satire poet Gaius Lucilius. Lucilius was a friend of Roman general Scipio Aemilianus Africanus. Her paternal grandfather was Gnaeus Pompeius, while her father was Sextus Pompeius. Pompeia had two elder brothers Sextus Pompeius and Gnaeus Pompeius Strabo. Through Strabo, she was a paternal aunt to triumvir Pompey and his sister Pompeia. Pompeia married Marcus Atius Balbus (148 BC-87 BC), a senator of plebs status from Aricia (modern Ariccia). Pompeia and Balbus had a son a younger Marcus Atius Balbus in 105 BC. His son married Julia Minor, the younger of two sisters of dictator Gaius Julius Caesar. The younger Balbus and Julia had three daughters. Among Pompeia’s descendants was the first Roman Emperor Augustus.

Gaius Julius Caesar (ca. 130 BC – 85 BC) was a Roman senator, a supporter of Gaius Marius, who was his brother-in-law, and the father of Gaius Julius Caesar, the dictator. Caesar was married to Aurelia Cotta, a member of the Aurelii and Rutuli families. They had two daughters, known as Julia Major and Julia Minor, and a son, Gaius, who was born in 100 BC. He was the brother of Sextus Julius Caesar (consul in 91 BC) and the son of Gaius Julius Caesar.

Caesar’s progress through the cursus honorum is well known, although the specific dates associated with his offices are controversial. According to two elogia erected in Rome long after his death, Caesar was a commissioner in the colony at Cercina, military tribune, quaestor, praetor, and proconsul of Asia. The dates of these offices are unclear. The colony is probably one of Marius’ of 103 BC. Broughton dated the praetorship to 92 BC, with the quaestorship falling towards the beginning of the 90s BC. Brennan has dated the praetorship to the beginning of the decade. Caesar died suddenly in 85 BC, in Rome, while putting on his shoes one morning. Another Caesar, possibly his father, had died similarly in Pisa. His father had seen to his education by one of the best orators of Rome, Marcus Antonius Gnipho. In his will, he left Caesar the bulk of his estate, but after Marius’s faction had been defeated in the civil war of the 80s BC, this inheritance was confiscated by the dictator Sulla.

3913. AURELIA COTTA (Howard Charles's sixty-seven-times-great-grandmother[3905], see Maternal Ancestry(301), Maternal Ancestry(302), Maternal Ancestry(302), Maternal Ancestry(304), Maternal Ancestry(307), Maternal Ancestry(310) and Maternal Ancestry(317)) was born in 120 B.C.E., in Rome. Aurelia was a Mother of Dictator Julius Caesar. She died in 54 B.C.E., aged about 66, in Rome.

Aurelia Cotta was a daughter of Rutilia and Lucius Aurelius Cotta or his brother, Marcus Aurelius Cotta. Her father was consul in 119 BC and her paternal grandfather of the same name was consul in 144 BC. The family of the Aurelii Cottae was prominent during the Roman Republican era. Her mother Rutilia, was a member of the gens Rutilii cognominated Rufus.
They were of consular rank. Publius Rutilius Rufus was her maternal uncle. Three of her half-brothers were consuls: Gaius Aurelius Cotta in 75 BC, Marcus Aurelius Cotta in 74 BC and Lucius Aurelius Cotta in 65 BC; they were the sons of her mother, Rutilia’s second marriage with her paternal uncle Marcus Aurelius Cotta.

Aurelia married a praetor Gaius Julius Caesar. Her husband died 85 – 84 BC. Their children were: Julia Major (102 – 68 BC), wife of Pinarius and grandmother of Lucius Pinarius; Julia Minor (101 – 51 BC), wife of Marcus Atius and grandmother of emperor Augustus; Gaius Julius Caesar (100 – 44 BC), the dictator.

Character

The historian Tacitus considered her an ideal Roman matron and thought highly of her. Plutarch described her as a “strict and respectable” woman. Highly intelligent, independent and renowned for her beauty and common sense, Aurelia was held in high regard throughout Rome. Aurelia and her family were very influential in her son’s upbringing and security. Her husband, the elder Gaius Caesar, was often away, so the task of raising their son fell mostly on Aurelia’s shoulders. When the younger Caesar was about 18, he was ordered by the then dictator of Rome, Lucius Cornelius Sulla, to divorce his young wife Cornelia Cinna, Cinna’s daughter. Young Caesar firmly refused, and by so doing, put himself at great risk from Sulla. Aurelia became involved in the petition to save her son, defending him along with her brother Gaius Cotta.

After Cornelia’s death in childbirth, Aurelia raised her young granddaughter Julia in her stead and presided as mistress over her son’s households. Caesar subsequently married Pompeia Sulla. During the Bona Dea festival held at her son Caesar’s house, her maid discovered Publius Clodius disguised as a woman, ostensibly in order to start or continue an affair with her second daughter-in-law Pompeia. Although Caesar himself admitted her possible innocence, he divorced her shortly after stating that his wife must be above suspicion.

Gaius Julius Caesar[3912] married Aurelia Cotta. They had two children:

- Julia (Sister Of Julius Caesar) Minor[3903] born in 101 B.C.E.; died in 51 B.C.E.
- Julius (Gaius) Caesar[3904] born in 100 B.C.E. in Alba Longa, Rome, Italy; died in 44 B.C.E. in The Forum, Rome

3914. GNAIUS POMPEIUS STRABO (Howard Charles's sixty-seven-times-great-great-uncle[3909]) was born in 130 B.C.E. to Sextus Pompeius Strabo[3915] and Lucilia ?[3916]. He is no longer living.

Gnaeus Pompeius fathered one son:

- Gnaeus Pompeius Magnus[3909] born in 106 B.C.E. in Picenum, Roman Republic; died in 48 B.C.E. in Pelusium, Egypt
